Lorna Lawrence

A&T Student Has Choice Grad Work

GREENSBORO - An A&T State University student, with a long interest in human nutrition, has won two internships for dietetic study at two of the nation's leading hospitals.

She is Miss Lorna Lawrence, who graduated from A&T on May 5, and will enter the University of Minnesota Hospital's dietetic internship program in Minneapolis on June 24.

Miss Lawrence was also awarded an internship by the Methodist Hospital in Indianapolis, Ind.

The one-year program in Minneapolis will provide her with additional training in food administration, clinical nutrition, especially in the treatment of patients with diabetes, heart problems and other serious ailments.

She will also pursue graduate study and at the conclusion of the program, will be eligible to enter the Ph. D. program.

Lorna became interested in foods and nutrition back in her native Jamaica, West Indies, while a student at the College of Arts, Science and Technology. After completing her two-year program, she worked for a time as a quality control supervisor in a food processing plant.

Her degree at A&T will be in foods and nutrition, with a specialty in therapeutic dietetics.

WSSU GRADS WILL HEAR ALUMNUS

Ceile Washington Looks For Challenges; But A Vet?

GREENSBORO - Ceile Washington is a girl who likes a challenge, and that is exactly what the pert senior at North Carolina A&T State University has on her hands after having become the first female to ever be accepted into veterinarian school from A&T.

"I transferred to A&T last year," Ms. Washington said, "not knowing what I wanted to major in. What I liked most about the school was that I didn't know anything about it."

"I just like something different...a challenge," she said explaining how she became one of only three girls in A&T's Animal Science program.

Ms. Washington's home is Atlantic City, N.J., and her parents were a little surprised when she decided to attend the North Carolina school.

They were even more surprised when she chose a pre-veterinary course of study. But their biggest shock was yet to come.

Most of the cows and horses in Atlantic City reside on billboards and such was about the extent of Ceile's experience with farm animals.

"You know most people think of veterinarians as practicing on dogs and cats, especially women veterinarians. But I have decided that I want to be involved with the larger farm animals...like horses and cows," Ms. Washington explained.

"Boy my parents were surprised and I guess I must admit that I'm a little surprised at myself. When we first began going to the A&T farm, I was scared, and being the only girl in most of the classes didn't help," she added.

Ceile Washington

But Ms. Washington overcame her fears quickly and will graduate this spring from A&T with a 3.1 quality point ratio and begin her four-year work at Tuskegee Institute in Alabama.

"It adds to the challenge that I am a woman," she said, "and being a black woman is even more. There aren't many blacks in that profession male or female."

But there may be another in about three years: Ceile's sister Stephanie is also attending A&T in the Animal Science program.

"And, oh yes, I've got another sister still in high school back in Atlantic City. I know she wants to go to college...Ceile smiled.

Labor Department Aiding Minorities

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Labor Department's program to train minority youths to pass apprenticeship entrance examinations has moved 30,000 into skilled trades in seven years and "will continue to have a high priority," Under Secretary of Labor Richard F. Schubert said last week.

Schubert addressed the Sixth Annual Urban League Labor Affairs Training Conference in New Orleans.

Though the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973 (CETA) decentralizes most of the Nation's manpower effort, it gives the Secretary of Labor authority to extend manpower services to special target groups, Schubert said.

Minority youths who have been assisted by apprenticeship outreach programs make up one of the special target groups covered by this legislation, he pointed out.

Citing the special need for continuing the Apprenticeship Outreach program, sponsored in many cities by the Urban League, Schubert said the unemployment rate for minority teenagers has been more than double the teenage average.

Last month's unemployment rate for blacks and other minority groups was 33.8 percent, compared with 15 percent for all teenagers.

Schubert pointed out that many jobless young blacks are concentrated in major cities.

Outsider To Draw School Mix Plan

CHARLOTTE, N.C. - Julius Chambers, attorney for the plaintiffs in Charlotte-Mecklenburg's school desegregation case, plans to ask that an outside consultant draw up an alternate pupil assignment plan for next year.

Chambers told U.S. District Judge James B. McMillan of his plans last Wednesday at the close of the first day of hearings on the school board's pupil assignment proposal for next fall.

THE LAWYER argues that the school's plan places an unfair busing burden on young black children. A request by Chambers for outside advice in 1969 led to the appointment of consultant Dr. John Finger of Providence, R.I.

Finger drew up the plan leading to the first massive busing of students here in September, 1970.

ELIZABETH Randolph, who oversees the school system's kindergarten program, testified during the entire session Tuesday in federal district court.

Mrs. Randolph defended the kindergarten assignment plan.
