or old field pine is probably the best species to plant. The trees grow readily in such situations, makes a dense growth while young, are easily procured, and yield a readily marketable product. Pines should be planted in late winter, or early spring, when the ground is in good condition, putting the trees from 4 to 6 feet apart each way. Small trees, from 1 to 2 feet high, which can be dug up in nearby fields, should be used. Great care must be taken to keep the roots from drying out; a tub of water on a wagon or some wet packing will help in this.

The osage, black locust is an excellent tree for reclaiming washed land. The roots are long and tough and run over the surface of the ground. Being a legume, like the clovers and peas, it greatly enriches the soil; but for the same reason inoculation advisable when planting in barren soils. A little rich soil from a bank where locust grows, or a small amount of stable manure scattered over the area will help it wonderfully. Fence posts are needed on every farm, and the waste places can be made to produce them very cheaply.

The farm woodland, or the area of forest growth representing nearly half of the average Piedmont farm, can be managed so that not only will the forest soil itself be saved from washing, but lands lying below them will be protected. When the thick coating of leaves on the ground protected from fire and live stock, most of the rainfall will be absorbed, this will prevent any accumulation of water gathering in the woods and washing down into the cultivated fields below. On the other hand, if the coat of leaves is removed by fire or the trampling of cattle, serious damage may result; the woodland loses its surface soil, and often nearby fields, over which it drains, are ruined.

It is a poor policy to use wood land for pastures. It will pay well to thoroughly prepare and seed cleared land to pasture. Good grasses need sunshine and moisture and trees prevent them getting this. Only a small amount of feed of a poor quality can be grown in the woods. The best plan is to grow grass in the open and reserve the woods for the production of timber and the protection of the steep slopes from erosion.

unions because of their political power. For 25 years you have been knocking at the doors of Congress, asking for bread and receiving only a stone. At last you have recognition of your rights as labor unions. In this bill we have incorporated your bill of rights, your Magna Charta.

PARCELS POST

The establishment of the parcel post was referred to as great relief to a people who were imposed upon by "exorbitant" robbing charges. It was realized that the express companies would be compelled to lower their rates to meet Government competition. Thirty-three years ago we carry from New York to Shreve a package on which the charge would formerly have been 50 cents. And the speaker has seen in Washington two chickens, killed, dressed and mailed in Providence Township the day before.

NO MORE WAR

Mr. Webb congratulated President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, who only the other day negotiated 30 treaties of peace which if observed, will cost a war of an entire year for consideration and arbitration before war can be begun with the United States. In this day when this Nation is surrounded by war, the spectacle is the more notable.

The speaker recalled how, a few months ago, the venial portion of the press was lampooning and cartooning President Wilson for not sending 300,000 American mothers sons into Mexico to be shot down by half-savage bandits and half-breeds. While that crew was at its height, Mr. Webb who never let an opportunity go by to encourage the President, said to him, "Mr. President, the American mothers are praying for strength to your arm to keep us out of Mexico." With a faint smile he answered, "I am doing my best."

"Thank God we have a Chief Executive whose pliancy, gentleness and patience have enabled us to part two battleships and not get bit himself."

"For my part, I prefer to stay in peace to grab shot," said Mr. Webb.

COTTON SITUATION

It is true that there are certain persons, whom I will not overname, who are going around saying that the present price of cotton is due to the National Administration. Mr. Webb said that the reason of the present situation and increased price of cotton was not the National Administration but the cotton market.

was within a foot of the road when the brakes were applied and the car stopped.

It was the most frightful thing that ever occurred here and we all feel grateful that it was no worse.

This incident brings us to the case which we have so often brought—that there should be erected a substantial metal guard all the way on both sides of that cut.

Rev. J. R. Miller announced his subject for Sunday morning as "A Divided House."

The service Sunday night will be conducted by the Various Missionary organizations of the church, W. M. U., Y. W. A. and Sunbeams. It will be a State Mission service.
