Terraces Alone Can't Prevent Soil Erosion

Terracing a farm is not the only thing that is needed to stop it from washing away and improve the soil, said I. O. Schaub, director of the Agricultural Extension Service of North Carolina State College of Agriculture.

While terracing and contour cultivation is the foundation of any good erosion control program on most North Carolina farms, he pointed out that something needs to be done to take care of the water at the end of the terraces, and that farming methods need to be adopted that will check erosion between the terraces and put every acre on the farm to uses to which it is suited.

Actual tests at the Soil Conservation Service Experiment Station at Statesville show that tons of rich topsoil wash out the ends of the best terraces that can be built, where farming methods that check erosion between the terraces are not followed.

As long as water runs down unprotected slopes soil will go with it, Dean Schaub said. Experience in erosion control demonstration areas in North Carolina, however, show that farmers can do much to protect their fields by terracing them, farming on the contour so that each row is a little terrace, keeping the land covered with close-growing soil building and soil building crops as much as possible, rotation crops, planting badly eroded fields and bare strips across good fields to close-growing soil improving or hay crops vegetating outlets to safely carry water from terraces, developing meadow strips to protect natural draws in the field, contouring and improving pastures, putting badly eroded land back to trees, and planting vegetation in gullies.

Bed of Roses? Almost—It's Air Conditioned

Washington, Dec. 6.—(IPS).—It won't be long, say the inventors, before we'll be sleeping in air-conditioned beds.

That the air-conditioning industry, already giving employment to thousands in newly created jobs, may expand to the field of conditioning beds, was indicated here last week when a New York inventor received a patent for a bed, air-conditioner.

His invention is a pipe arrangement that is fitted to a bed. Condition air—cool and fresh—flows out over the sleeper from holes in the pipe.

A BANK'S BUSINESS
 PROGRESS AND PROSPERITY IN A BANK DEPEND UPON THESE THREE FUNCTIONS:
DEPOSITS
 Consists of the sums placed in the bank for safekeeping by individuals and business firms. Savings and checking accounts provide the bulk of these deposits.
LOANS
 are the "business" of a bank; the interest paid by the borrower creates the income from which interest on deposits and the expense of conducting the business are paid. The bank is always ready and willing to make good loans.
SERVICE is represented by checking accounts, safe deposit boxes, commercial aids and other activities that a bank is able to conduct through experience and activities.
 The First National has successfully performed these duties for many years.
