Q.—Can beef be preserved on the farm in the same manner as pork?
A.—Yes. Any part of the beef carcass can be corned, but as a usual thing the rounds or hindquarters are dried. Cut the meat into five or six pound chunks and rub with salt. Then pack in a clean vessel or hard wood or stoneware and cover with the pickle containing one and one-half pounds of salt, one ounce of salt peter, one quarter pound of sugar or syrup, and one gallon of pure water. Let the meat remain in the pickle for about two weeks and then smoke lightly to improve the flavor hang in a cool place and use as needed.

Dairymen To Find Winter Profitable
Dairymen will probably find the winter of 1937-38 one of their most profitable since 1930, A. C. Kimrey, of State College, said in forecasting the North Carolina dairy situation.
He explained that the production of feed grains and hay in 1937 has been large in relation to livestock number and that feed prices during the current feeding season will average decidedly less than a year earlier.
Kimrey also pointed out that milk production per cow is likely to average the highest since the winter of 1931-32. An increase of three to five per cent from October through next May over the like preceding period is expected. Most of this will occur after the first of the year.
In numbers, milk cows this winter will probably average about the same as last winter. There may even be a slight increase, Kimrey stated.
Feed prices already are lower in relation to dairy products, and in the next few months, feeders will be at a much greater advantage than they were last winter.
The number of milk cows, which is now six percent less than the peak of four years ago, appears to have passed the low point, the State College extension dairyman said. However, the number is still somewhat below average in proportion to population.

Farm Questions
Q.—What kind of eggs are best for hatching purposes?
A.—Eggs for hatching should be clean, fresh, well-formed, of good shell texture with color conforming to requirements of the breed, and should weigh 24 ounces to the dozen. All round, short, or thin shelled eggs together with those having ridges around them should be discarded when selecting eggs for hatching. All eggs should be collected two or three times a day to prevent chilling and those selected for hatching should be stored in a cool place.
