Arey Gives Best Time For Seeding Pastures

Pasture-seeding time is once more at hand, John A. Arey, extension dairy specialist at State College, is reminding farmers. Spring seeding of permanent pastures should be completed by March 1 in the Coastal Plain and Piedmont areas, and by March 15 in the mountain counties. If pastures are started after those dates, Arey said, they may not be entirely successful, since the delicate plants from late seedlings do not have time to establish their root systems before the dry, hot weather of summer begins.

Proper seed-bed preparation is one of the most important steps in developing a good pasture. The seed-bed should be pulverized to a depth of two or three inches, but the portion below should be left firm. This can usually be accomplished with a disc. Too deep cultivation should be avoided. In producing good stands, fertilizer and lime play important parts. An application of manure evenly distributed just after the seed are sown is recommended. However, if manure is not available, 300 to 400 pounds of a high grade fertilizer should be applied at planting time. On sandy soils 4-8-1 is recommended and on the heaviest clay soils 4-12-4 is generally used. These pasture seeds should contain a large percentage of legume plants. Since these will not grow well unless the soil is sweet, an application of a ton of ground limestone per acre should be used for slightly acid soils. Arey recommends heavy seedings to secure a good seed. Thirty to forty pounds of seed per acre bring best results.
