

Rotenone Unwelcomes Mexican Bean Beetle

The Mexican bean beetle is again making its unwelcome annual visit to thousands of North Carolina bean fields.

To control this insect, J. O. Rowell, extension entomologist at State College, is recommending that growers use rotenone either as a spray or as a dust.

Gardeners who are equipped to dust will find the three-fourths of one per cent rotenone dust satisfactory. It is highly important that the dust be applied to the underside of the leaves. Care should be taken to obtain a thorough and uniform coverage of all the foliage.

For snap and bush beans, the rate of application should vary between 15 and 20 pounds to the acre. The application rate on pole beans will depend on the size of the plants.

Dusting should be started when beetles are found on the beans, or when egg masses become numerous on the underside of the leaves. From one to four applications are necessary, depending on the prevalence of the insects.

Rotenone dust mixtures should not be used in a spray unless the label on the package indicates that a diluent has been used which will mix readily with water.

When a spray is used, Rowell recommends finely ground derris or cube root containing 4 per cent rotenone at a dosage of 1 1/2 pounds in 50 gallons of water. If small amounts are desired, he advises 1 1/2 ounces in 3 gallons of water.

The usual rate of applications is 90 to 100 gallons to the acre. As with the dust, it is necessary that the applications be made uniformly and thoroughly and that the spray reach the underside of the leaves. Repeat every 4 or 5 days until control is obtained.

Shade Trees Need Careful Attention

There is perhaps more misunderstanding in regard to the care of shade trees than about any other horticultural subject, according to John Harris, extension landscape specialist at State College.

Too many people regard a tree as simply something nature provided for shade and beauty and let it go at that. However, the tree cannot survive if nature's methods of caring for it are tampered with.

For instance, decaying leaves and other organic matter provide a natural fertilizer for the tree. Yet, modern lawns have to be spick and span, and generally leaves are not allowed to accumulate. So the tree is deprived of its food, unless the home owner is careful to supply it artificially.

Some of the symptoms of the undernourished tree are thin foliage, undersized leaves, lack of growth, dead branches, branches dying back on tips, and undersized buds.

When these conditions are prevalent, Harris said, the tree may be fertilized at any time of the year with a slow-acting organic material, such as manure. If commercial fertilizer is used, it should be applied between February 15 and July 15 to produce best results.

A good commercial fertilizer may be applied at the rate of one-half to one pound for each one inch diameter of the tree. One of the best methods of applying the fertilizer is to punch holes 12 to 15 inches deep and place a proportionate amount of the fertilizing material in each hole.

Farm Questions Answered

Q.—When should the poultry laying flock be culled?

A.—This, of course, depends upon laying conditions and the period of molt. The flock should be watched carefully during the early summer and when production falls below 30 per cent it is time to start culling. The earlier the molt, the more rapid the culling. The bird that has been properly fed and goes into a molt in June, July, or even August should be removed from the flock.

Q.—When is the best time for seeding the fall garden?

A.—This depends upon the hardness of the different vegetables and upon the time required for maturity. Tender vegetables should be planted in time to produce a crop before killing frosts occur. Many of the cool-season crops will mature through light frosts, but most of them should be planted in time to reach maturity before the heavy frosts. A table giving planting dates for seasonal vegetables is given in Extension Circular 122 and this may be obtained free up on application to the Agricultural Editor at State College.

Plant Sudan Grass For Midsummer Use

Sudan grass can still be seeded in June for pasturing during the summer months when permanent pastures are not so productive, according to R. L. Lovvorn, agronomist of the Agricultural Experiment Station at State College.

When seeded on a well-prepared bed, thirty pounds of seed are usually sufficient for an acre. Generally, kgrazing can be started within five or six weeks after seeding, or any time after the plants are from 8 to 12 inches high.

However, it is not necessary that grazing be started so early, Lovvorn said, since the most common practice is keeping cattle off the Sudan until permanent pastures decline in production.

Livestock should be alternated between two fields of Sudan or one Sudan and one lespedeza field.
