TOM AND GEORGE

George: "Tom, a lady called on my wife the other day saying they were getting up a raffle for a poor old man but my wife refused to buy a ticket." "Why," asked Tom? "She said she didn't know what she'd do with him if she won him," replied George. "There's a woman that's satisfied with one man; but she'd probably not be satisfied if she couldn't have certain articles of her furniture replaced."

Started home Tuesday night about eleven o'clock, when a loud honking of horns out on the Shelby highway and coming into town, was heard. Guessed that it was the basketball teams returning, but didn't think that they were celebrating a boys' win. But they were. It seems that the boys decided that they couldn't end up the season without a win, so they took their last one. Nice work, boys, but it came sorta late, don't you think? Or do you

We hope that no fur flies tonight, but we do believe that we'll see one of the most hotly contested basketball games of the season. The only team to lick the local Lions in a conference till the last half will be out to repeat, and the locals will be out to prove to them that they can't do it again. We quit prognosticating with the Duke-Carolina football but if you want to see the best game of the current season, just be at the gym tonight at 8:15.

Spring may be here, but we do wish that we could feel some of the sunshine that's supposed to come along with it. Oh well, maybe when it does come we'll have as much sun shine as we've been having rain.

The last column was a stall until I could gather my wits and think of something to write about, but I still

Cotton Belt Uses Wheat By-Products

Wheat and cottonseed rank first and second, respectively, in value and importance as sources of by-products used in livestock feeding in the United States, reports Earl H. Hostetter, professor of animal husbandry at State College. They go hand-in-hand in economical livestock-feeding, he said, because cottonseed meal is rich in the protein that is needed to balance wheat by-products, such as wheat bran and middlings.

While wheat is not generally thought of as a Southern crop, yet in 1937 nearly six million bushels were produced in North Carolina, and this, with more than 300,000 tons of cottonseed produced in the State the same year, represents a considerable tonnage of available livestock feed from by-products of the two crops.

Wheat bran is palatable, bulky, mildly laxative and rich in phosphorus, which makes it comparable to oats in feeding value. It is one of the most popular dairy feeds, and is widely used for workstock, breeding ewes, growing lambs, and for sows at farrowing time. Wheat bran gives best results when fed with cottonseed meal and farm grains in balanced rations, with bran comprising no more than one-fourth to one third of the ration.

Wheat middlings are known by a variety of other names, such as grey brown, or red shorts, shipstuffs, and mid chops. It is essentially palatable, low in fiber and high in digestible nutrients and is a valuable supplement.

mentary feed, for livestock, particularly for young animals.
 Prof. Hostetter pointed out that wheat itself is, of course, an excellent livestock feed but its value as a human food makes it too expensive to use for this purpose. Wheat pastures also are used to some extent for winter grazing, but its chief use as a livestock feed is in its by-products.
