Arey Explains That Pastures Need Feed

Too many North Carolina farmers look upon their permanent pastures as "poverty row," says John A. Arey, dairy specialist of the State College Extension Service. The old feeling, that when land gets too poor to grow profitable crops, it is still suitable for pasture is yet too prevalent in this State for the good of many cows, he added.

Poor, washed land will not make pasture unless it is rebuilt. Most of such land should be planted to forest trees. Not much is expected of a cotton or tobacco crop which is not fertilized, yet the plant residue on closely grazed pasture is more completely removed than is the case with either cotton or tobacco.

Arey recommends that a light application of stable manure be applied early this month to old pastures which have become thin. On farms where manure is not available, an application of about 300 pounds of a high test fertilizer per acre give good results.

On the more fertile soils, a complete fertilizer will not be needed because the object there is to stimulate the growth of legume plants, such as the clovers and lespedeza. All that is needed for this purpose is an application of phosphate and lime, such as ground limestone and superphosphate or basic slag. The latter contains both elements.

One to two thousand pounds of ground limestone and about 300 lbs. of superphosphate, 400 to 500 pounds of basic slag per acre will do the work. This material should be applied just as soon as the soil gets dry enough to work. It can be broadcast and worked in with a drag harrow, or better still applied with a drill.
