The altar was banked with long leaf pine, ferns and magnolia branches. Tall floor baskets were filled with handsome white gladioli and pom-pom dahlias. A large basket of white hydrangeas and fern was used as a center back ground. The steps and altar were carpeted in white.
Music was rendered by Mrs. Arthur Mauney, organist, who wore an ashes-of-roses lace dress over taffeta. Miss Myra Barber of Atlanta, Ga., was soloist. She wore a navy chiffon with a picture hat of white straw. Mrs. Mauney played "Centilene Nuptiale" by DuBois, "Serenade" by Schubert. The bride entered leaning on the arm of her father, John Fletcher Ware, who gave her in marriage. She was gowned in a creation of white triple sheer crepe with a sweetheart neckline, slitted at the shoulder. The short sleeves were puffed, the blouse fastened with self covered buttons in the back. The skirt was pleated and very full. Her off-the-face white turban and white accessories completed her costume. She carried an arm bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley tied with wide satin ribbon. They were met at the altar by the bridegroom and his brother Hubert Dixon, who acted as best man.
During the ceremony, Mrs. Mauney played softly "Traumeret" by Schumann and Mendelssohn's Wedding March for the recessional.
The mother of the bride, Mrs. John Fletcher Ware, wore blue lace over satin with white accessories and a corsage of pink rose buds with valley lilies.
