North Carolina's contribution to the Irish potato field, the recently developed Sequoia, will get nationwide attention Friday, January 12, through the coast-to-coast network of the Mutual Broadcasting system. Named for a famed Indian chieftain who devised the Cherokee alphabet, the new potato has shown unusually high yields as well as a definite resistance to diseases and insects. Since it was formally announced about three months ago, inquiries have poured into N. C. State College, the institution which originated this variety.

To M. E. Gardner, head of the Department of Horticulture, and Robt. Schmidt, associate horticulturist of the Experiment Station, go credit for developing the Sequoia. Beginning work 10 years ago with true seed, they selected and re-selected the most promising of the plants until definite characteristics were obtained.

The complete history of the Sequoia will be described in the 15-minute broadcast, which will be originated through Station WRAL in Raleigh to the nation at 4:15 p. m.

The cornerstone of the National Capitol was laid by George Washington in 1793.
