Prospects Brighten For Good Crop Year

Looking at the 1940 agricultural picture in North Carolina from a production standpoint, prospects for crops are good, says E. C. Blair, agronomist of the State College Extension Service.

For one thing, farmers have sown 130,000 acres in winter legumes, a far greater acreage than ever before. If these legumes are allowed to grow and gather nitrogen until April and are turned under and followed by corn, an increase of 10 bushels of corn to the acre, or a total of 1,300,000 bushels, should result.

Also Tar Heel growers had 911,000 acres in lespedeza last year. As lespedeza usually occupies the land for two years, the chances are that only half this acreage will be used for another crop this year. If planted to corn, the land should produce 500,000 bushels more of the crop than formerly. Roughly, this would mean an increase of 450,000 acres, or 4,500,000 bushels of corn.

Blair said there is another reason why crops in the Piedmont should be good this year. The weather was unusually favorable for plowing during the fall of 1939, and consequently, nearly all land intended for corn, cotton, and cowpeas was plowed before the end of December. This means that the soil has been subjected to freezing and thawing, which will thoroughly pulverize it before spring.

The freezes and thaws also will help to kill destructive insects, which gradually have been growing more abundant during the last two or three years of mild winters. Also, organic matter plowed into the soil last fall has had all winter to decay, and more of it will be usable by 1940 crops than would have been the case had plowing been delayed.
