Picture Entailed Million Man-Hours Human Labor

One million man-hours is the approximate amount of human labor involved in the Technicolor production of "Gone with the Wind" filmization of the celebrated novel by Margaret Mitchell, which opens Monday at the Dixie Theatre.

Manpower, of course, isn't metered out like mechanical horsepower, and the estimate of a million man-hours doesn't mean that a million man — and women — could have made the picture in an hour.

Nor does it signify that Producer David O. Selznick, working alone eight hours a day, 310 days a year, could have made the picture in 400 years. But it does give an idea of the magnitude of what is, in many respects, the most tremendous single production task ever attempted in the motion picture industry.

The figure of a million man-hours was reached by adding together the total time for all persons employed on the picture, including the stars, Clark Gable, Vivien Leigh, Leslie Howard and Olivia de Havilland; the director, Victor Fleming, and nearly 5000 other persons who have worked since the picture began.

Lengthy Preparation. Of this time, according to Raymond A. Klune, production manager, 250,000 man-hours were accounted as preparation, and 750,000 as actual production.

"These United States fought eight years to toss off the tyranny of a British king, and the Civil War itself, some exciting scenes from which are seen in "Gone with the Wind", lasted more than four years, with three million engaged and 600,000 killed.

Such historic events as these occupied the attention of millions of men for billions of hours. Yet if statistics of the Selznick masterpiece are translated into "fan-hours" — the number of persons who will see the picture multiplied by time it will take them — the figures assume, if not those astronomical proportions, at least geographical magnitude.

Local Legion Junior Team Looking Good

Junior baseball in Kings Mountain, it seems, is really going to be something this year. Trovano, who knows a good bit about the game, is keeping his mouth clamped tightly as to what he thinks, but the material doesn't look so terribly bad. A couple of boys who were not on the high team look pretty good, in fact. And several of the lads who almost won the Western Conference should make it a well-rounded out team. Anyway, we hope so.

About the finest thing about the team, tho, is the way Trovano gets along with the boys. The boys decided quite awhile back that he's a swell fellow, and they're working to please him.

Too bad about the Mountaineers losing that final tilt Friday afternoon, especially when it meant so much to them. But one redeeming fact about the game was the infield work. The boys were clicking perfectly.
