Where Life Still Is Simple By IRVIN S. COBB

Laughing Around the World

With IRVIN S. COBB

ON THE Staked Plains in western Texas life is more or less primitive. Federal judge down in Texas told me a story illustrative of conditions in that wide and rather desolate area. According to his account, a traveler on horseback was making his way through an especially remote district. After hours of lonely riding he approached a tiny adobe house sitting in the midst of an unbroken expanse of alkali and mesquite and bunch grass. Just as he came abreast of this forlorn homestead, a thin, under-nourished woman in a faded wrapper darted out of the door, sped across the road and hid herself in the chaparrel before the traveler either could hail her or inquire into the causes of her flight. As he checked up, puzzled to account for this curious behavior on her part, a lubberly boy, apparently about fourteen years old, came hurriedly forth from behind the little building.

"Mister," he called, "did you see a woman runnin' away jest now?"

"I did," said the stranger. "Who was she?"

"That was my maw."

"That was my maw."

"Your maw, eh? And what was she running away from?"

"I reckin she's runnin' away from me—doggone it!"

"Why, you infernal young scoundrel!" exclaimed the traveler. "I've half a mind to get down off this horse and give you a good thrashing. What do you mean by chasing your poor mother about over the country like this? What has she done to you?"

"She's a-aimin' to wean me," said the youth.
