Young Black Promoted

The following from a Gastonia Gazette column will be of interest to Herald readers. Young Black is a son of Mrs. Annie Black Self and the late Morley Black of Kings Mountain.

The promotion to private first class of Charles Anthony Black, of Route 2, Kings Mountain, is announced by the Raleigh Marine recruiting office.

Young Black enlisted in Raleigh last spring, and the promotion came before he had six months in the Marine Corps. He is the son of Mrs Annie B. Self of Kings Mountain, and after leaving school was employed by the Margrace plant of the Reinier Mills. He is to be congratulated on his rapid promotion and his many friends hope for more of the same to follow.

After completing the basic training at Paris Island, Black served for a brief period at the Charleston, S. C., Navy Yard, and from there went to the Marine Barracks, Naval Ammunition Depot, Balboa, Canal Zone, where he is at present stationed. The Marines stationed in the Canal Zone have many opportunities for sight seeing, as Panama offers much in the way of cathedrals and ancient style of architecture.

COLLEGE COMMENTS

(By Carolyn Prince)

Well, folks, we'll make this column pretty short this time, bein' as how folks appreciate things more when there is a little of it. Did I hear someone disagree?

Getting on to the subject of K. M.'s young representatives in institutions of higher learning. Charlie Thomasson is in the band at the University of Florida keeping up the good work.

Did you see the little folders which Blanton's Business College got out recently? Well you ought to because you'd find out what an outstanding student Roy Smith is there.

Fan mail! Imagine! And from some of the students at College. It's good to know that somebody reads this stuff. I can hardly wait to tell you about—oh my, I forgot that I promised to keep it a secret. Maybe I'll get permission soon to tell you about it.

Strategy Will Help In Insect Control

Insects cost North Carolina farmthousands of dollars annually in reduced yields and quality of crops. J. O. Rowell, Extension entomologist of N. C. State College, says it will pay farmers to study insects and their habits, and develop means of combatting them.

"The insects of fruit and garden crops," he says, can be controlled economically by insecticides or chemical measures. But with field crops, the relatively low vale prohibits such costly methods in most instances. Hence, the farmer is forced to resort to strategy, to a large measure, in fighting many of the field crops insects, especially those that inhabit the soil."

Rowell says the most elementary principle in protecing field crops from their insect enemies is the of keeping the two separated as far as is possible. This principle is embodied in crop rotations.

For example, the entomologist explains, many of the insects which breed normally on grass, also attack the grain crops but do not bother legumes. Therefore, insects often can be controlled by avoiding the planting of grain crops, especially corn on land which previously was in sod.

Crop rotations also tend to separate the crop from its pests if the rotation system includes as it should crops which are unrelated and hence do not have the same group of pests, Rowell stated. If the crop is grown on the same land for many successive years its pests will increase each year.

In conclusion, Rowell said "Crop rotations are a complete control measure only in a few instances. But this system will aid in reducing injury.

SCS Offers Cash For Kudzu Seed

The SCS is sending out an SOS to North Carolina farmers.

Earl Meacham Hagerson, soil conservationist of N. C. State College, says the Soil Conservation Service is making an urgent plea for North Carolina farmers to harvest every ounce of kudzu seed that can be located this fall.

The SCS has announced that it will pay market price for all the seed it can get. At the present time this runs about one dollar a pound for cleaned seed and 25 cents a pound for seed in the pod. Approximately five pounds of dried pods are required to make one pound of cleaned seed.

For Ladies' Stetson Hats in Kings Mountain. We Invite You To Inspect These Creations Which Are The Last Word In Style and Quality.

"SPECTATOR" by Stetson

A felt casual, with a tucked crown reflecting the soft character of this season's styles of that class. Nothing more appropriate for fashion's prominent tweeds. But you'll see that when you wear it.

$4.95

"FLIGHT" by Stetson

There's a touch of the West to this classic design—a dare of felt, caught in a tuck at one side, for a brim that makes your eyes seem wider. Bold, beautiful stitching in leather.

$7.50

"WHIPPET" by Stetson

Plant this "flower-pot" small bonnet atop your head and you'll have that fine-frame-ness feeling, a lift to your spirits that you can grant a new hat to give. Silk stitchings on the crown and brim, and ribbon trim.

$7.50

"PLAYGIRL" by Stetson

Wear it any way you like—brim snapped in front—down all around—up on one side, or up as a bonnet—give it your own individual touch. There's a double edge to the brim of this brilliant felt casual—one of the season's new style spots.

$4.95

"THREE-WAY" by Stetson

Here's a tantalizing felt hat! Wear it becomingly in any one of three ways—with the crown in pork pie fashion for spectator sports, with the brim side-rolled for casual tweeds or turned down all around for country wear. It's packed in a special triangular box. You'll like that, too.
