Miss Page Gets Nursing Degree

In second annual "White Night" ceremonies held at Emory University last week Miss Addie Mae Paeg, of Kings Mountain, N. C., received her registered nurse pin and donned her white nurse's uniform for the first time.

Emory Hospital Chaplain L. M. Twiggs pronounced the invocation and gave the benediction and Dean of Administration, Boisfeuillet Jones, gave the farewell address.

Miss Page has now officially completed her course, although diplomas and degrees will not be awarded until June. She is the sister of Mr. Harry E. Page of Kings Mountain.

Dean Jones in his talk called attention to the "high dignity of the nursing profession which has emerged through the centuries because of the love of men for their fellow-men."

"At Emory University, a Christian institution supplying for mankind what mankind needs, nursing has at last taken its place among the professions," he said.

Eighty per cent of this graduating class are degree students who will receive the degree of bachelor of science in nursing. Miss Page is among this group.

The green peach aphid (plant louse) was not regarded as a tobacco pest until 1946, when it caused severe loss to shade-grown tobacco in Florida, southern Georgia, and one field in South Carolina. By the next year it had spread to both the Carolinas, Maryland, and Connecticut, and in 1948 damage was extensive throughout the tobacco-producing area.
