Case Dealer Awarded Plaque

Local Case farm implement dealer, T. Lewis Hovis of Community Implement & Supply Co., Inc. received a five years' recognition plaque from the J. I. Case Company for his outstanding service to farmers at a meeting in January at Atlanta, Georgia.

In presenting the awards, L. S. Devoe, branch manager, pointed out the change from manual to mechanized agriculture in the past quarter of a century has been one of the major factors in making the American standard of living what it is today.

"To the consumer, this progress has brought a quality and quantity of food and fiber unknown in the history of the world. To the farmer, this has meant shorter and less tedious working hours, greater independence, and better living for his family. The farm equipment dealer has done much to foster this agriculture development, and make this country the world leader in food production, even though less than 20% of the population is on the farm," Mr. Devoe said.

The J. I. Case Company, which has manufactured farm machinery since 1842, presented ninety-six awards in the Atlanta branch area. Of these, two went to dealers with 25 or more years of service; twenty-one for ten years of service; and fifty-nine for five years of service.
