Grazing Necessary For Beef Growing Supplementary grazing for beef cattle is important. It can mean a lot of money to the farmer.

D. D. Robinson, assistant Madison County farm agent for the Extension Service, says one farmer can prove the worth of this extra grazing for beef cattle.
Zeno Ponder, says Robinson, figures the value of his supplementary grazing this way:

On March 12 Ponder turned 30 head of 500-pound beef calves on 25 acres of barley. The barley, seeded last fall from seed grown on the farm, cost Ponder $30, about $9 for gas and $21 for labor. After turning the calves out on the pasture, Ponder stopped feeding 600 pounds of silage per day, and was able to trim the hay diet to 600 pounds per day.
Figuring hay at $32 per ton, the saving amounted to $9 per day.
Silages sells at about $15 per ton, and Ponder saved $4.50 per day on this regular part of the beef cattle diet. This brought the daily saving to $14.10.

Ponder turned 20 more head of cattle on the barley April 1. Figuring the savings the same way, he estimates the additional daily saving at $5.40 total savings, with the first herd of 30 calves grazing 35 days and the second herd of 20 grazing 15 days, Ponder figures amounted to $634.50. This isn't all of the saving, however.
Ponder grazed 55 ewes on the barley during January and February, and his livestock will graze it until it is completely gone.

Another good result of the supplemental grazing, Robinson says, is that the cattle gained considerable weight while on the barley, they were only holding their own in the feed lot.

Good insect control can mean from 10 to 60 cents per bushel more income for North Carolina grain farmers.

Prices for city people are much the same as for farmers. —prices are down somewhat, but not enough to affect the cost of living.

Chick output of North Carolina hatcheries during April was 4 per cent below April hatcheries a year ago.
