Tax Bill Big Enough

Though he couched it in the general alternative of the possibility of more income or less services, Governor Umstead's suggestion that more taxes are going to be required to operate the state government must have made unpleasant reading for many North Carolinians who feel that state taxes are quite sufficient in a period when emphasis is on paring tax bills, not increasing them.

Governor Umstead made his remarks in connection with a comment on the short 1953 take of income taxes, which fell $3.5 million below estimates.

The report on income taxes reminds, of course, that North Carolina's tax structure is geared to return high income in boom times and small income when the economic situation is poor. The inherent nature of the system, therefore, means that sometimes the state eats pretty high on the hog, a site uation that has existed more or less, since the introduction of the three percent general sales tax in the early thir-

Many will interpret the governor's statement as a prelude to a stepped-up campaign to get the General Assembly to raise rates in existing taxes and, perhaps, to levy new ones. In 1953, some pressure developed to expand the sales tax to certain products not now taxed, but the General Assembly contented itself with making optimistic estimates of revenue gains from existing tax sched-

Even so, the legislature issued some bonds for permanent buildings and endorsed the two other big issues, which were subsequently voted by the people.

Another trial balloon is being advanced which suggests another road bond issue, this time for primary arteries, and that, too, would be accompanied by another tax increase on gasoline.

It is natural that Governor Umstead and the people who run the state government desire to continue and to improve and to broaden state services. The men in the saddle want to have the necessary means to say "yes" to requests for ser-

However, at a time when, at best, the nation is in a period of leveling off from its long-term boom, it does not seem apropos to be talking about new and ad-

Perhaps by the time the General Assembly convenes in January, the leveling will be over, state revenues will be coming in at higher rates, and the situation will be different.

It is a generally accepted thesis that more good for the tax dollar is obtained the closer to home its paid, which means folk would rather send tax checks to Raleigh than to Washington. But new tax and more tax talk won't be too pleasant to anyone among the vast rank and file of the state's taxpayers.

Thus far, reports on the Red Cross fund campaign have been few and far between, and the total of funds collected is considerably insufficient for the proper operation and continuation of this worthy agency. Totals from many of the larger contributors have not yet been reported, but those who have not yet made their contribution should attend to this important matter at once.

Our best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Ben Speidel, who are leaving the Kings Mountain Country Club to assume the management of a club at Rocky Mount. Since the Rocky Mount club is much larger than Kings Mountain's, the appointment is a promotion and one that is deserved. At the same time, the club regrets the loss, for it has enjoyed good management during the 30-month tenure of Mr. and Mrs. Speidel.

Good Advice

Frank Jeter, the farm editor from Raleigh, gave some good and expert advice here last week when he spoke to the annual Farmer's Night banquet of the Kings Mountain Lions club.

And many of the farmers, in their after-dinner comments, indicated they thought it good, too.

Much of it — planning of operations, use of "water-farming," more intensive use of available land — can be encouraged and taught by the several farm agencies, and can be practiced by the individual farmers as they expand their investments in labor-saving machinery. In Mississippi, many cotton farmers are fertilizing with agricultural ammonia, kin to the household variety, and are reporting fabulous increases in yields. Farm agents can supply the answer as to whether this type of fertilizing—described as cheaper to apply—is practicable in Cleveland County.

Another recommendation of Mr. Jeter's could be supplied by city groups. This is the development of roadside markets for the so-called cash groups. Many communities have developed thriving cooperative curb markets that are beneficial to farmer and city-dweller

The problem of storage of farm crops is also a point one, to be worked out by the farmer and his in-city neighbor. As Mr. Jeter pointed out, it's pretty silly for a farmer to sell corn at harvest time, then buy it back for feed a few months

In farming, as in industry and commerce, the opportunities are available to those willing to set goals and to work

No Peddling, Please

The late P. T. Barnum, part of the original team which formed the great Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey circus, is credited in folklore with originating the statement 's sucker is born every minute."

Thus, numerous people make a rather spurious living by preying on honest, unsuspecting people who think everyone else as honest as they.

The evidence is legend. Widows get flim-flammed out of their life savings by scheming salesmen of spurious securities; people nearly get burned to death when bargain sweaters poof into flame at the first spark of fire; housewives buy magazines that never arrive; people make down-payments on photograph bargains, then find the studio never existed. Mr. Muntz, the man who was bringing bargain television to homes direct from the manufacturer, is in bankruptcy and his guarantees are good for fire-building.

Thus the attention of local merchants to an increasing local problem of houseto-house peddling is quite in order, both from the standpoint of protecting the citizenry, and from the standpoint of sharing the tax load too.

Of course, there are legitimate houseto-house salesmen. The Fuller Brush man is well-known for distributing a worthwhile product, and some magazine salesmen, actually, are working their way through college. But these are in the minority.

Effort of the Merchants Association to get the city to set up legal restrictions on house-to-house selling will, if productive, benefit the great majority of

If you haven't bought a broom from the Lions club salesman yet, see him this weekend. Better still, call the "warehouse" at C. E. Warlick Insurance Agency for immediate delivery. Profits from the sale of the brooms will aid the Kings Mountain club in its continuing work of sight conservation, and, in addition, will help many blind people to earn a living.

MARTIN'S MEDICINE

Smart folk will be afraid of their shadow today.....

It's April 1, or April Fool's Day, meaning the prank day is here again, and that young minds — and perhaps some old-er ones too — will be dream-ing up mayhem for all and sun-

The medicinal reference library fails to shed much light on the origin of the holiday observance, but note is made of an "April Fool", as one who is made sport of, I have known the definition to take a different twist, to wit: one who makes sport of.

m-m At any rate, April Fool has been an institution for many a day. As I recall, my first April Fool bite was on the old saw, "Your shoe's untied." But there were many bites — and pranks—after that simple and undamaging beginning.

Many a fall I've taken as a team of youngsters "operated", with one as fence and the other as pusher.

But my main memory of April Fool was a disinclination to attend school one April 1st many moons ago. This shortlived fun I paid for dearly, Two hours "stay-in" after school for three weeks was the punishment meted out, which was bad enough, but the parents imposed a similar curfew at the homestead. No gamboling at the drug store, which, to a high school boy, must be something like solitary confinement to a jailbird. I, and the several other pranksters, drew a parole at the end of five days (due, I suspect, to the growing suspicion among the faculty that the "stay-in" was hard on them, too), and I learned a lesson: it's all right to play April Fool pranks, but don't be an "April

Somewhere in April Fool's Day history there must be found a connection between the prankstering and spring, for certainly the lazy days of spring must have something to do with the revolt against reason, rule, and convention, Just as spring makes a fisherman's mind start demanding that he hold a line, thus spring and April seem to demand activity and freedom Fool".

I haven't played an April Fool prank in years, but the Herald might have had a good one, had Pete Barkley been a week later opening officially his new food store on York Road.

Readers who noted a faint, or not-so-faint, heady aroma emanating about the house last week need look no further, for the odor was embedded in the Barkley advertisement. Some nasty looking stuff Cecil Ball, the Cashmere Bouquet soap salesman, furnished was mixed into the ink, the idea being to make Pete's advertisement stand out more and to remind the lady reader to pick up the free orchid Pete was offering feminine visitors.

Whether the desired effect. was achieved I have not heard as this is being written, but there were some other effects, nevertheless.

Pressman Paul Jackson's experience was a sample. Paul went home Tuesday night, after working late, and by that time personally was immune, reasonably, to the heavy perfume which filled the print shop. In addition, he benefited by the cool, night air. But he had hardly parked his hat until his wife wanted to know, "Where you been?" "Nowhere," Paul replied innocently. "Just at work.

"No you haven't either!" was the stern rebuttal, It took considerable persuading, Paul said, to establish the facts of the case.

From reports reaching the Herald, similar difficulties occurred in other spots. Should there be a next time, proper warning definitely will be given. However, since the staff armost succumbed from asyphiation, it is not likely that suggestions for perfuming ads will be accepted with favor in the Members of the North Carolina Education Association meeting in Raleigh last week adopted a resolution opposing secret discussions of public school business. It

"The association, therefore, will encourage and promote meetings and discussions so that the people may know not only the 'what' but also the 'how' and 'why.' of all decisions affecting our public schools."

This is further evidence that, at long last, there is a growing revulsion against secrecy at all levels of government but more particularly of that sort which was legalized by intemperate action of the 1953 session of the General Assembly. North Carolina's teachers have dual role, As citizens of North Carolina they are "the people who have a right to know" what is going on when the public's business is under discussion.
