DO IT NOW

A Feature on Gardening by the Kings Mountain Garden Club

This is the time to start bulbs for indoor bloom during the winter months. Hyacinths, both Roman and Dutch varieties, and many kinds of narcissi can be easily grown in water or in soil. For either method, buy good bulbs from a reliable seed store, although it is not necessary to purchase the largest or most expensive.

If water is the medium used, choose a container deep enough to hold plenty of fiber or pebbles around each bulb. The roots are strong and, if cramped, will push the bulbs too far out of the liquid. Water should touch only the base of the bulbs. Place the container in a cool, dark place in order to give the roots a chance to develop before the tops grow. Move it into light and warmth for the final growth. Bulbs grown in water are exhausted after they have bloomed and must be thrown away.

Tulips, as well as the above-mentioned bulbs, can be grown in dirt, select a 4-6 inch pot, place small rocks in the bottom for drainage, and half fill it with a good soil. Set the bulb in place and add dirt to one-half inch of the top of the pot, leaving the bulb tip just out of the soil. Water the pot thoroughly and bury it in the ground to the rim. Cover it with one-half inch of sand and six inches of mulch to break the frost line. After six to eight weeks, the pot will be full of roots and ready to be brought in to a cool room temperature until growth has started. Warmth may be increased to hasten the flowering. If, after the blooms have faded, water is gradually withheld until the foliage dies, the bulb may be set in the yard to bloom the following season.

Amaryllis is easily grown and will produce flowers year after year. It is wise to buy the largest bulb available. Fill a pot just larger than the bulb with good soil to which a teaspoon of bonemeal has been added. Set the bulb so that at least half of it is above the dirt. Press the dirt firmly about the amaryllis and give one watering before putting the pot in a cool, half-dark place to stay until growth begins. Give no more water until the stalk appears, then move the pot into the sun and increase the water gradually as the stalk grows. Add about half a cup of liquid manure each week. As the leaves appear after the flowers, the watering and fertilizing should be continued. During the summer the pot may be sunk outside in shade and kept moist with liquid manure every two weeks. In autumn the soil should be allowed to dry out gradually. When the pot is brought inside, it should be watered once and the forcing begun again. Amaryllis will grow for years in the same pot and should not be shifted until the roots actually force the bulb out of place.

Lily-of-the-Valley may be grown indoors in soil or in a bowl filled with fiber, peat moss, or sand, provided the roots have been thoroughly frozen before they are brought into light and heat. The valley lilies sold by reputable firms have been in cold storage and will come into bloom in three or four weeks after they are given water and light. It is possible to use roots from the garden, if they have been left outside until they are hard-frozen for five or six days. As the garden-grown roots differ in size, the bloom may not be even.

All this - and more miles per gallon too!

Be sure to test out the phenomenal effect of "variable pitch propellers" in Dynaflo Drive!

So Buick engineers asked themselves—"If you can do it with air, why can't you do it with oil—the oil inside a Dynaflo Drive?"

And to make a long story short—they could, and they did.

They designed and engineered the propeller-like blades inside the "stator" of a Dynaflo Drive so they can change their pitch as much as 75 degrees.

That provides one setting for more miles-per-gallon, and another for an instant safety-surge of power when it's needed.

All you have to do is push the accelerator pedal down to the last half-inch beyond the full throttle position—and a-way you go!

Of course, there's a lot more to make a visit to our showrooms the "must" of the new-car year.

There's a step-up in styling as sensational as the step-up in power.

And the step-up in horsepower is this: 236 in the ROADMASTER, SUPER and CENTURY—188 in the low-priced SPECIAL.

Pay-off on progress!

Buicks today go a lot farther on a gallon of gas, thanks to constant improvement in Dynaflo and in engine design. Even the new 236-hp ROADMASTER averages 4.8 more miles per gallon than Buicks of six years ago.

But the thrill of the year is Buick's latest engineering "first"—and what it does for the man or woman who drives the latest and greatest Dynaflo Drive.

*Standard on Roadmaster, optional at extra cost on other Series.
