STRETCHING YOUR DOLLARS

It is a fact that most families in the United States own life insurance... most — not enough, and few overinsured. Since life insurance is the foundation of our present and future security, don't you think it wise to review and make sure you are stretching your life insurance dollar? Here are some helpful suggestions:

(1) Make certain that your beneficiaries are up-to-date. When you bought your policy you had certain objectives in mind and specific needs to fulfill. However, changes may have occurred (birth, marriage, business, etc.) and you may now wish to reconsider your original decisions.

(2) Save as much as possible on your premium payments. You can save five to six percent by paying your premium annually rather than on a monthly or quarterly basis. For example, you may save enough on a $10,000 whole life policy to add another $500 of insurance.

(3) There are common disaster clause instructs the insurance company how to pay the proceeds if a husband and wife should lose their lives in the same accident. Without this clause there may be a question as to how the policy will be paid depending upon which spouse died first. You may be bankrupting your children.

(4) Know how to use your dividends wisely by applying them to premiums, or buying paid-up insurance, thereby adding to your overall family protection. If you are uninsurable this is a good way to increase your insurance without a physical examination.

(5) Consider the effect of debts and obligations upon your estate. Earmark enough insurance to cover specific expenses such as unpaid bills, loans, installment accounts, mortgages, medical and other expenses, including taxes. If you are not properly protected, your family may have to sell its home, quite often below market cost, in order to obtain the necessary cash immediately to meet obligations.

(6) Consider your beneficiary. You may feel that income payments, rather than a lump sum are the best method for your beneficiary to receive insurance benefits—stop and think what would happen in an emergency. Would there be enough cash? You can make sure there will be adding a release clause to your policy which will permit portions of the principal to be withdrawn.

(7) Include life insurance in your retirement plans. At retirement age the cash value of permanent policies can be used to supplement a company pension or your Social Security benefits, as well as other retirement plans.

(8) Protect a "growing" family through the use of a "Stretching Your Dollars" policy. This provides extra income while your children are growing up and is an extra margin of protection against the possibility of your death at an early age.

(9) Like husbands, wives and mothers have an economic value too. Although there is no way of compensating for the loss of a loved one, life insurance can help to lighten the burden and get the family back on its feet. Insurance will enable you to see cure household help, child care and cover medical, hospital and funeral expenses.

(10) Do you have enough insurance to replace at least five years of income?
