TEENS HEALTH
Health and Safety Tips
from
The American Medical Association

Almost two years ago American physicians, through the American Medical Association, announced a new universal symbol which tells anyone rendering emergency care to a person who is unconscious or otherwise unable to communicate that its wearer has a special physical condition requiring special attention.

In the intervening two years the symbol has gained worldwide acceptance. It has been widely disseminated throughout the United States and, through the World Medical Association, is now being utilized in many other nations.

The symbol may be displayed on a wristlet, an anklet, a medallion around the neck or elsewhere. It is a sign that there are vital medical facts on a personal health information card in the bearer's purse or wallet or on an alerting device.

The symbol is a hexagon-shaped emblem containing a six-pointed figure, or sign of life. Superimposed on the figure is a staff with a snake entwined about it—the staff of Aesculapius, the insignia of the medical profession.

The symbol is used by many individuals. Diabetic coma, for instance, sometimes makes its victims appear intoxicated, and treatment may be dangerously delayed. The symbol also is used to indicate allergies to antibiotics, such as penicillin.

The need for certain medicines must be known. Heart patients taking drugs to prevent blood clots may bleed profusely if injured unless they receive special care. Epileptics could be saved much trouble and unnecessary hospitalization if they carried a card indicating they may have seizures.

The American Medical Association recommends that everybody have a card, such as the AMA emergency medical identification card, to show who they are, where they live, whom to call if they become ill or injured, the name of their doctor, and when they were immunized, particularly tetanus, or lockjaw. On this card should be noted any special problems that need immediate attention in an emergency or could cause an emergency.

Some people's problems are so serious that it is absolutely essential for the first aider to know about them in an emergency. A durable signal device made of metal or plastic should be worn by such people, preferably about the neck or on the wrist or ankle.

Many organizations and manufacturers sell durable signal devices for emergency medical identification. The names of those reported to the AMA may be obtained by writing to Emergency Identification-AMA, American Medical Association, 535 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., 60610. The AMA emergency identification card also is available from the same address.

Is your boy one of the several hundred thousand American youngsters who will soon be "going out" for football at his junior high or high school?

If so, you will be vitally interested in the new six-point joint recommendations of the American Medical Association and the National Federation of High School Athletic Associations that will help to insure that your boy is properly conditioned for this vigorous contact sport.

Beginning with a satisfactory pre-season medical examination, there is no substitute for requiring a standard of physical fitness that assures sufficient strength and endurance, a good level of skill, and acclimation to hot and humid weather, before exposing any individual to the rigors and risks of tackle football.
