SO WHAT ELSE IS NEW?

MODERN VS. TRADITIONAL

There's been a battle going on for many years between modernists and traditionalists in art, music, architecture — and furniture design. Who is to say which is right and which is wrong?

The truth is — that neither side is right or wrong. It's a matter of ideology and whether it is modern or traditional, or a mixture of both, the only true criteria is: if it's good design, it's all right.

Right now there is a strong trend in both directions, even though this may sound contradictory. Factories featuring good design in modern and contemporary, and those featuring Early American, Colonial, 18th Century, French Italian and Spanish Provincial in well designed, authentic styled furniture, are all doing equally well.

Never did the furniture buyer have such a wide variety and selection of every conceivable style of furniture to choose from.

Furthermore, most homemakers don't want one style of furniture throughout their home. It's not unusual these days to see a lovely home furnished with English traditional in the living room, French Provincial in the dining room, and bedrooms furnished in Regency, Italian and Early American.

This breaks away completely from the monotony of using the same type of furniture throughout the home. A mixture of two or three different periods of furniture in the same home can be perfectly charming.

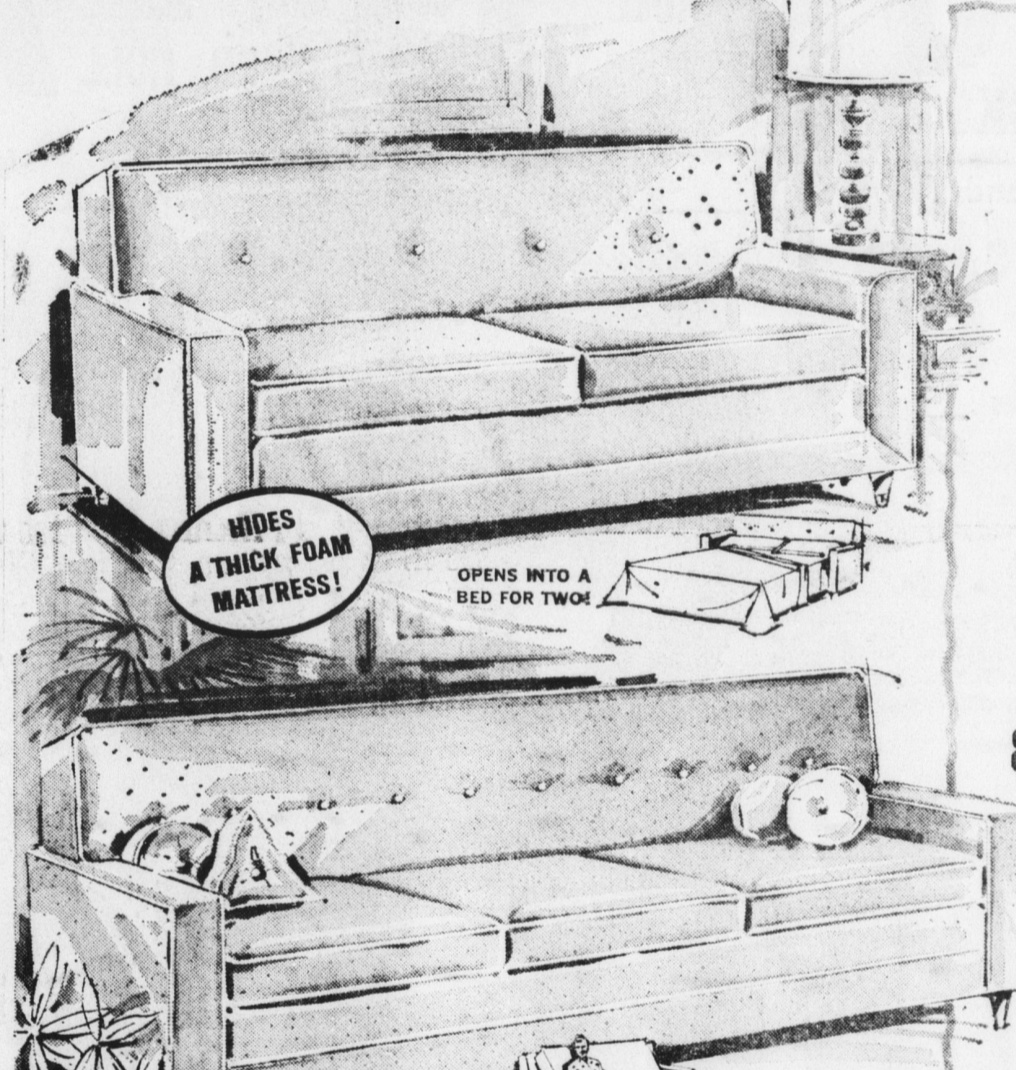

And for a complete selection of furniture, we invite you to come in.
