Agriculture In Action

WHO NEEDS ENEMIES? Tobacco farmers often have cause to wonder who their friends are.

Take President Johnson for example. Leaf farmers, repelled by coldwater's purported philosophy on government farm programs, stampeded over to Johnson's camp last year for an assurance that our crop programs were here to stay. They got the assurance. Johnson got the votes.

Tobacco people felt pretty secure with Johnson in the White House. And they were thankful. After all, he supported and signed the bill for the acreage-poundage program, didn't he?

True. But then he turned around and signed another bill which will bring about the labeling of cigarette packages with health hazard warnings beginning next year.

As the ink dried, the White House issued this statement:

"The bill does make a real contribution to the efforts to bring to the attention of all smokers and potential smokers the scientific and medical data indicating the health hazards in cigarette smoking."

Those who believed signing the bill would tie the hands of all who are interested in this field, it is apparent that no barrier exists to the introduction and passage of additional legislation at any appropriate time.

"The President carefully considered the bill, and, based on the advice of his own special counsel, the Budget Bureau, and various departments and agencies involved in this particular area of activity, agreed that the benefits of the bill far outweighed any deficiencies or disadvantages, and accordingly signed it."
