Keep Heating Bill Under Control By Insulation, Storm Windows

RALEIGH — There are some things you can do to help keep your heating bill under control, now or anytime, Charlotte Womble, extension specialist in housing and waste furnishings, North Carolina State University says.

First, be sure the house is insulated. If it is, you've probably already found that insulation can pay for itself in as little as five years. An easy way to check its effectiveness is to put one hand on a partition between two heated rooms and the other on the ceiling, or an outside wall. If surfaces feel equally warm, insulation is giving effective protection.

Insulation may be blown into the attic or batts may be installed. If you install insulation yourself, follow instructions carefully, to assure maximum heat control.

Storm windows and doors will reduce heat loss, especially in older houses. A well-fitted storm window can cut heat loss through a window as much as 50 per cent.

As an alternative, cover windows on the inside with heavy plastic. Tape plastic to window frame. Tape all edges; masking tape does a good job.

Another alternative is to attach plastic to window and door screens. To do this, remove screens, tack plastic to the inside of the frames, then replace screens. The wind cannot blow plastic off so easily if it is attached to the inside of screens.

Check for heat leaks in the shell of the house, especially around doors and windows, Miss Womble suggests. This goes for storm doors, too.

Replace worn, torn, or otherwise ineffective weather stripping. Doors and windows are likely to warp or shrink, making even comparatively new stripping unequal to the task of shutting out winter's icy blasts.

Your house, like a boat, has caulking where structural units meet, such as the joints between window frames or chimneys, and walls. If caulking is cracked or missing, get out putty knife and caulking compound for a quick repair job.

Have the furnace checked by a reputable serviceman. Call him in for an annual cleaning and general inspection of mechanism and controls. Ideally, your furnace should run almost constantly. If it is always switching on and off, you are wasting fuel and money reheating chilled quarters.

Keep the air moist, with a humidifier if necessary. Dry air requires a higher temperature to maintain equal comfort.

After you set the thermostat in the morning leave it alone, unless no one is home during the day. For comfort and economy, turn heat control down at night, but not below 65 degrees. You won't save on fuel bills if the furnace has to do double work in the morning to bring the temperature up more than 5 or 6 degrees.

Close off rooms or parts of the house not being used, Miss Womble advises. Draw draperies or shades at sundown. The dead-air pocket behind them acts as insulation.

Doing these things now will protect your family from cold weather this winter and spring. Keeping these facts in mind all year long, will help you get ready for old man winter before he issues his first icy blasts next fall.
