THE FARMER'S VOTE

The ballot is going to rival the plow as one of the farmer's most useful implements during this 1966 planting season. Elections involving everybody from congressmen to county commissioners are on tap. The weeding out begins with the May primaries and ends with the general elections in November. After that, anything left standing is a lawmaker.

Despite all the talk about how few farmers there are today, this group need not be an impotent body of voters. The truth is, it doesn't always take many added votes to change the results of an election.

The 1964 congressional races bring this out vividly. As in 1966, the seat of every member of the House was up for grabs then. The record shows that 112 representatives won their places in office with a margin of less than 55 per cent of the total vote in their respective districts. Of these, 63 were Democrats and 49 were Republicans.

Of the 83 new House members who were elected in 1964, 53 claimed less than 55 per cent of the votes. Eleven were named winners by taking less than 51 per cent of the votes.

Three House incumbents from North Carolina were returned to office by less than 55 per cent of their district votes in 1964. One had a margin of 54.3 per cent, another an edge of 51.8 per cent, and another a majority of 51.6 per cent.

Facts like this somehow make the farmer's ballot seem a little bigger. It's apparent that a few more folks at the polls might have turned the tide one way or the other.

Just who the farmer's friends are can be determined by the voting records of those in office. And the ballots should fall accordingly. In elections, as in agriculture, we should reap what we sow.
