Guide Helps To Show Profit

Growing corn isn't anything new to a farmer who has been in the business very long, but growing corn for profit is something of a new idea to some North Carolina farmers.

Since tractors replaced mules, the milkman ran the family cow out of business and giant "egg factories" rendered the barnyard chicken flock economically un-fertilizer, insect and disease control and timely harvesting are all ingredients of growing corn for profit.

These steps are explained in detail in a new publication by the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service entitled, "Growing Corn for Profit," Circular 469.

One of the relatively newer production practices covered in the publication is the use of pre-emergence and post-emergence herbicides to control weeds and grasses. Such plant pests as cocklebur, morning glory and others can be controlled chemically, contributing significantly to the farmer's chances of achieving high yields and higher profits.

The publication is available at county agricultural extension offices. It can also be obtained by request from the Department of Agricultural Information, North Carolina State University, Raleigh.

Precision Farming Saves Fuel

A type of cultivation which allows farm tractors to travel at faster speeds and saves on fuel costs is being recommended by agricultural engineers at North Carolina State University.

This type of farming is called shallow cultivation.

J. C. Ferguson, extension agricultural engineering specialist, says shallow cultivation is "precision farming." It involves the plowing of one inch or less in depth.

The purpose of shallow cultivation is to avoid pruning the root systems of plants. It can be used for most row crops although some crops are more shallow-rooted and sensitive to cultivation than others.

Shallow cultivation is especially recommended for cotton, corn and root crops such as Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes and peanuts.

In most cases, Ferguson says, farmers cultivate to control weeds and grasses. But when they cultivate more than one inch in depth, weed and grass seed are moved nearer the ground surface where they are left to germinate.

Ferguson explains that applications of herbicides have virtually eliminated early cultivations. However, later deep cultivations may damage plant root systems and throw plants into stress under dry weather conditions. These practices are especially noticeable in cotton.

Shallow cultivation does not destroy ridges on which plants may be seeded. Ferguson points out that this is an important factor since ridge planting is popular for cotton, tobacco and root crops.

New equipment may be necessary for shallow cultivation. Ferguson says that farmers may cultivate faster; therefore, speed type sweeps with low crowns are necessary.

Two positions of the sweeps help determine the tractor speed. These positions are lateral spacing and pitch. Lateral spacing refers to moving sweeps nearer or farther away from the plants. Pitch is the degree to which the sweeps set up on the point.

Ferguson points out that the key to shallow cultivation is maintaining a uniform row profile. One of the methods agricultural engineers at N. C. State recommend is a line diagram. In this method measurements are made to determine the distances between sweeps and the pitch before starting to cultivate.

Dear Voters of Cleveland County:

As a candidate for the office of Sheriff, I sincerely wish to introduce myself to every citizen of Cleveland County.

Having been born and reared in Number 5 Township, I am a lifelong resident of Cleveland County. The youngest son of Mrs. Zeb V. Cline and the late Zeb V. Cline, who served on the board of Cleveland County Commissioners from 1948 to 1957, I received my education at Waco Elementary and High Schools. Military training and service in the U. S. Army, 28th Regiment, 8th Infantry Division, 1945-1946, which included active duty in Germany, provided yet a deeper and more significant experience in shaping my life.

Upon honorable discharge from the Army, I resumed business and dairying operations with which I am presently involved. My wife, the former Martha Jean Poston, my daughter Amy Jean and I attend Elizabeth Baptist Church and reside on Stony Point Road east of Shelby.

Campaigning extensively in our county will be a real privilege and pleasure for me. At present, I am enjoying meeting the people — making new acquaintances and renewing old friendships. I am encouraged by the interest you have shown in my endeavor; moreover, I appreciate any expression of your concern for my campaign. The opportunity and challenge of serving the people of Cleveland County would be both a privilege and a special trust.

Yours very truly,

Ambrose B. Cline
