Mountainettes Down Burns

him with four fouls, so when Mitchem fouled out we put him back in.

"Then we were charged with a technical foul, even though the ball had not been put in play, and Burns turned it into five points.

"But, like I said, we're not making excuses, but we are supposed to be informed when a player has fouled out," he added.

Hambright left the game late in the third quarter, at which time Watson was already on the bench, but unaware that he had fouled out.

Then, with four minutes remaining, Mitchem drew his fifth personal. With less than a minute remaining, Otis Cole and substitute guard Phillip Francis followed.

After falling behind by 12 points, 78-66, with 2:35 left, the Mountainettes outscored the Bulldogs 12-1, to cut the margin to one point, 79-78, with 45 seconds left.

The Bulldogs, however, showed poise and the Mountainettes had to either foul or let Coach Bill Powell's boys run the clock out.

Burns, which is 3-1 in league play and 5-1 overall, turned loose the hottest shooting attack the Mountainettes have faced all season. And the Mountainettes couldn't rebound with the 6-6 Peeler.

Cole, the Southwestern Conference's leading scorer, paced the Mountainette attack with 25 points. Barnes, hitting mostly from the corners, added 18.

Peeler, who was "Mr. Clean" around both backboards, was the game's top scorer with 34 points, his best performance in two seasons at Burns. Three other Bulldogs also hit in double figures.

Should Parents Live With Children? Studies Show They Prefer Not To

RALEIGH — Should parents live with their married children? "Studies show that four out of five older persons now maintain their own households," notes Isabelle Buckley, extension specialist in aging, North Carolina State University. "And most of them prefer it that way, according to a study done at an eastern university," she adds.

In a survey of 2,300 older parents, nine out of ten thought their children did not have an obligation to make a place for them in their homes.

Older families, as well as young ones, apparently cherish their privacy. But it is only in relatively recent times that they have been able to secure it for themselves, according to Miss Buckley.

New housing designed especially for older persons has helped. So has the rising level of home ownership among all age groups. But the financial means to live independently are vital and obviously this generation of older persons commands more resources.

Social security payments provide much of the basic protection. On top of that foundation many persons have built a more substantial retirement program. Nearly 39 million active and retired workers are now enrolled in some form of pension program. Government studies anticipate that older persons receiving pension benefits will nearly triple in the next 15 years.

In addition, many older families have built further security from a combination of life insurance, savings and investments.

In short, Miss Buckley says, "Older Americans have entered a period of rising income and widening choices. For a majority, the question of living with grown children is no longer a matter of necessity. It's a matter of choice."

To keep houses snug during winter, weather stripping should be installed around loose-fitting doors and windows. The best type is the all-metal strip made of spring bronze, a ribbed metal strip that remains springy. When installing in a double window, raise the sash all the way or lower the upper one. Nail the strip against the frame and an extra strip against the inside of the bottom rail of the upper sash. The nailed side should be toward the indoors. When the window is closed, this will press against the top of the lower sash, sealing the space between the two sashes.
