Constitution Made U.S. Great, Maner Writes

By BOB MANER

This week has been officially dedicated by the Congress of the United States as "Constitution Week!" The work of the Constitutional Convention was completed September 17, 1787, and with its signing an experiment in government, mankind's most perfect to date, was begun. It is a privilege for me to take these few moments to write about it.

Few moments in history have enjoyed the marked collective talents of those assembled. One common bond—the abject terror of tyranny in the hands of any person or group-bound them together, and has allowed us to enjoy a maximum of freedom in all areas of living, and, at the same time, challenged us to self-control and restraint in dealing with our fellow man. This inspired document has insured maximum development and distribution of wealth made possible by America's bountiful natural resources.

The brevity of the document including the first ten amendments—the Bill of Rights—is remarkable. Their self-confidence in the work is evidenced by the difficulty in the amendment process provided, and is supported by the relatively few times amendments have passed.

These men intended to have meaningful "checks and balances" in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government. It is evident that the legislative branch was to be the most people-oriented with the House of Representatives being more so than the Senate. In spelling out the duties of each branch, they desired to vest the most power in the legislative group and lesser amounts in the judicial and executive. Most harmful excess have come from these latter two branches and our forefather's fear of concentration of power has been justified.

Our government is not perfect. Nonetheless it is the most perfect ever devised. It is my sincere belief that America can remain a great nation so long as we serve responsibility as citizens. These wise men who have served us so well have made our job remarkably easy. Join me in counting my American Citizenship as my greatest earthly blessing.

Construction On Dam Began On Wednesday

By MARTIN HARMON

The court appointed commissioners in the city's condemnation action against Buford Cline set the figure for Mr. Cline's 93-acre tract for the Buffalo Creek dam site at $31,500, the city has put the money in escrow with the clerk of court, and Gillespie Construction Company was beginning work on the dam Wednesday afternoon.

The city had proffered Mr. Cline $30,000.

The commissioners, William Herndon, Ernest Harrill and George Dover conducted a hearing Tuesday morning.

Mr. Cline testified in his own behalf saying he had paid $25,000 for the tract, and others testifying were Coleman Goforth, Attorney Charles Horn, and Steve Hawes, a Charlotte real estate broker.

City attorneys Jack White and Verne Shive presented no witnesses, but cross-examined the others.

Both Mr. Cline and Mr. Goforth testified that bottom land is worth $1,000 per acre, but, under cross-examination, could report no sales at that figure. The realty broker said the Cline property should be worth $55,000 but acknowledged he was making comparison with road frontage property on Highway 18. Mr. Horn quoted another property sale, but this property also contained a residence, as the Cline tract does not.

Mayor John Henry Moss said he was pleased at the decision, which compared favorably with the three appraisals the city had from Frank Hoyle, Coates Company and Tom Jones.

Ralph Seigler, construction superintendent for the Gillespie Company, said earth moving equipment was being moved to the dam site immediately.

Dennis Fox, resident engineer of W. K. Dickson Company, was also pleased at the result, as were the city attorneys.

"We are now in position to move ahead," Mr. Fox commented.

The 84-foot high dam will be 1000 feet across, including a 250-foot spillway.

Prior to Tuesday's hearing Mr. Cline had filed an advance appeal against the condemnation action which Clerk of Court Paul Wilson had calendared for the term of Superior Court beginning September 22. Judge Fred Hasty of Charlotte will be presiding.

Both parties have 30 days from Tuesday's hearing to appeal the $31,500 award.
