Food should do no more than satisfy hunger; it should also supply a wide variety of nutrients. Since no one food supplies us with all the nutrients we need every day, we need to rely on a variety of foods.

When you plan a meatless menu, you and your family can still be assured of adequate protein by relying on alternative protein foods. These include cheese, fish or seafood, poultry, eggs, dry beans and peas and nuts.

Skipping breakfast is frequently given as one reason many teenage girls have poor diets. A good way to help remedy the situation is with special, out-of-the-ordinary breakfast menus. Fix foods that are nutritious and well-liked, such as cheeseburgers, even if you have never thought them to be breakfast foods.
