B. M. E. GARDNER N. C. STATE UNIVERSITY

The pruning of ornamental shrubs is one garden operation which is most likely to be neglected, poorly done or overdone.

Frequently the wrong plant is selected for a particular location when preparing the landscape plan for your home, and then an effort is made to keep plant in bounds by pruning.

If you have plants which need pruning, now is a good time to get the job done. I like to go to the job done. I like what I choose to call deep pruning.

As an example, we might consider two Burford plants growing in good locations. They are about six feet tall and have a spread of about eight feet.

Remember that you are going deep by removing whole branches from the inside and some shorter laterals from the periphery or outside.

However, farmers do not have to file an estimate if they file their 1971 return and pay all the tax due by March 1, 1972, according to J. E. Wall, District Director of Internal Revenue for North Carolina.
