Directing his remarks to questions about the Michael-Broyhill Food Bill. Stamp the Congressman said this bill would take off the roles people who receive food stamps who "shouldn't get them, people who are strikers or those who don't want to work." He cited statistics from 10 years ago that 1 of 439 people receive tax stamps, adding that President Ford had attempted to make changes and this effort was held up by court order. Broyhill, replying to a question, said legislation By Congress could bring about a reform.

Congressman Broyhill said the U.S. Congress reputation, he quoted U.S. News & World Report as describing "at all time low" is due to the fact that Congress has failed in answering major concerns of the people including the issue of regulatory reform, in energy self-sufficiency, in food stamp reform, and in tax reform, asserting that the real power should lie in the people. He declared as "bad policy" Presidential Candidate Jimmy Carter's philosophy on right-towork laws and replied to a question of what can we do decontrol and deregulate and slow down deficit spending that "citizens should speak up in letters to editors and to elected officials to mold public opinion."

Broyhill said he is "against" the alleged

"jobs bill" endorsed by Governor Carter in the Humphrey-Hawkins Bill which greatly increases the powers of the President to control and run the economy. Under the terms of the bill, the Federal government, he said, would become the em-ployer of last resort faced with placing on the government payrolls all who want to work and cannot find jobs. The legislation also requires the President to prepare and implement long-range economic plans for the purpose of achieving full employment. "The costs of such a program would be so enormous and the additional powers granted to the President to regulate the private economy would be so broad that I can not support such an ill-advised approach to solving the nation's unemployment problems," he declared. He said that a broad range of leading economists have testified before Congressional Committees that this legislation would cost $30 billion or more and fuel an inflation rate of around 15 percent an-nually. These make-work jobs dependent on future taxes would have to be paid by the nation's working men and women already hardpressed to meet their tax bills, he declared.

He also said he is against Congressional raises in an inflationary year. Carl DeVane arranged the program and introduced Congressman Broyhill. Charles Hamilton

One humorous incident that happened along the way involved a can of Gato: Aid and some men in a country store.

'Someone had given me the soft drink," Dr. Poston recalled. "There I was in my hiking boots and backpack standing around the store talking with some other customers. When I finished my talk those men began dropping change into my can of Gator Aid. They caught me off-guard and after they began I couldn't tell them they were dumping money into my lunch."
