Training Pays Off For Rescuers

Their simulated falls off Kings Mountain for rescue training paid off Sunday for members of the Kings Mountain Rescue Squad who had to put their training to work to assist Gaston County Rescue Squads and Bethlehem Fire Department in rescuing two Charlotte hikers who fell on the mountain Sunday.

About 50 volunteers worked for about three hours in the dark and on rugged terrain to remove Steve Harkey, 19, by stretcher to Kings Mountain Hospital and his injured companion, David Keever, 19, who had decided to take a different route down the mountain from the eight young people who had spent the day hiking the mountains, taking pictures and having fun.

The two injured youths were going to climb down the rocks while the rest of the group went down the path.

"It was real narrow," according to Keever. "Steve was right beside me. The next minute I looked around and he was going down. He fell 50 to 60 feet off a ledge. He never touched nothing on the way down. His whole body hit on the rocks at the bottom and was knocked unconscious immediately."

Young Keever said he started down to help and caught his foot between a tree and rock and fell about 10 to 12 feet and rolled the rest of the way to where his friend was.

According to Keever, "David's back was hurt and the rest of the group rushed over to the ledge and looked down at their injured friends. Eddie Stokes, 19, climbed around the long way and tried to give first aid and everybody threw their coats down and Eddie covered him up and built a fire to keep him warm."

Barry Holshouser ran all the way down the mountain to get help and Paul Jernigan built a fire at the top of the ledge to warm himself and the girls, Tenny Nixon, Rosanna Griffin and Millie Pfaff.

When Barry got to the cars, he found that all three had been broken into and robbed of tape players, speakers, and clothes. He rushed to a nearby service station and phoned for help.

The rescue teams were on the mountains in minutes along with a local doctor, Dr. Frank Sincow. Steve Harkey was transferred from Kings Mountain Hospital to Charlotte Memorial Hospital where his condition is listed as satisfactory. David Keever was treated at Kings Mountain Hospital and released.
