1956 School Board Honored

School board members who served before school consolidation on the Grover School Board took a nostalgic tour of Grover School and got a few surprises Thursday at the invitation of Principal Jim Scruggs.

Scruggs, who came to Grover as principal in 1956 from Burlington where he was teaching and coaching at Walter Williams High, invited the men who hired him 31 years ago to have lunch at the school. He surprised them with engraved plaques and then took them on a tour of the school building. For some of the former board members it was their first trip back to school since they served on the 1956 board.

"They were pleasantly surprised with the changes and improvements on campus," said Scruggs, who said the new computer lab and the new kindergarten building brought expressions of delight from his visitors and former bosses.

Returning to school were Glenn Rountree, who made the initial call to Jim Scruggs in 1956 with an offer of the Grover principalship, Bill Camp, who is now a member of the Grover town board, Frank Royster and Stough Wright. The fifth member of the board, Broadus Matthews, is deceased.

A Hard-To-Get-To Hobby

photo being the beautiful print of a Christmas tree worm, so tiny that he shot close-up in the British West Indies and took 15 minutes to get one picture.

On the other hand, angel fish, he said, are so curious they are unafraid and swim toward the "big fish in the water", said Bookout, describing himself. "Of course you can't touch them, but you can get a good picture," he adds.

Before he went to work in Charlotte 13 years as an electronic technician, Bookout worked at Stowe's Radio-TV for 23 years. He joined the Charlotte Scuba Diving Club and met marine biologist Kevin Russell, now his partner in underground photography, and since then has dived in Hawaii, The Bahamas, Florida Keys, and most recently in Grand Cayn in the British West Indies where he shot some of his recent collection.

Bookout finds his hobby relaxing and vacation diving always interesting.
