

HUD Lists More Audit Findings Against KM

(Begins on page 1)

Moretz said, in addition to supplying water to Eaton, the city also supplies other out-of-town industries, including all at the Kings Mountain Industrial Park, which is in Gaston County, and several residents on West Gold Street Extension.

Moretz and Moss pointed out that there are three procedures involved in securing and using HUD money, including (1), making the application, (2), yearly performance reports, and (3) yearly monitoring by HUD.

"People from HUD come in and go through our files and visit with the various improvements," Moretz said. "At no time have I seen a request that money received from the sale of water be returned to the CDBG program."

As for the York Road sewer project, the audit claims the city applied for a grant to provide sewage for 269 residents, including 169 of low and moderate income, but that the sewer line only serves Union Underwear.

Moretz says the line is serving at least 269 residents and probably more than 169 of them are low or moderate income families.

The sewer line, Moretz claims, serves Pine Manor Apartments, and most of the residential areas between I-85 and the Highway 74-York Road intersection.

In the case of both the water tanks and sewer project, Moretz said, studies are made to use as guidelines for applications. By the time the projects are completed, figures may change.

"A study is not a definite commitment," he said. "When you get into a project you may have to modify it. But you still accomplish the same goal. A study never really stops. It may take three to five years to complete it."

"It's difficult for someone to come in and comprehend all the facets," he continued. "To do that in three or four months is a very major task. You don't do a study overnight. You have to get out and see how it works.

As for the questions about the Kings Mountain Development Office, the audit memo claims the purpose of that office is to assist low and moderate income families in business opportunities, career development, acquiring private housing, housing rehabilitation or other housing assistance. However, the auditor feels the KMDO's major function has been to attract new businesses into the city.

The memo states "the current director of KMDO stated that when he was hired in April 1978, he did not know that KMDO was federally funded or that its primary purpose was to provide assistance to low and moderate income families, and that he was told that his primary job would be to attract new business to the city."

Mayor Moss said that the KMDO "has assisted in the development of minority businesses and assisted in attracting industries that provided jobs to low and moderate income persons."

Moss said the city is in the process of developing sufficient documentation to satisfy HUD's requests.

"That office is always open to minority businesses," Moss said. "I feel it serves a good purpose to the community."
