designated the "Overmountain Victory National Historic Trail." Events along the 219-mile trail will be as historically accurate as possible.

Major activities have been scheduled along the way to help celebrate the Bicentennial of the campaign and battle. Starting things will be Gov. John Dalton of Virginia, who will speak at Abingdon High School on the evening of Sept. 24.

A three-day series of activities will take place Sept. 25-27 at Elizabethton, Tenn., and at nearby Sycamore Shoals State Park, site of the meeting of Virginians and Tennesseans. Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander is expected to be present for at least part of the festivities at Elizabethton and the State Park.

Former U.S. Senator Sam Ervin is to address the marchers when they reach Quaker Meadows in Morganton, N.C., on Sept. 30, to be joined there by contingents from Surry, Wilkes and Caldwell Counties, N.C.

Caldwell County marchers will muster at Fort Defiance, 12 miles north of Lenoir, at 2 p.m. on Sept. 28. They will be joined there the next morning by contingents from Surry and Wilkes Counties.

Dramas about the campaign and battle and westward expansion will be presented nightly Sept. 25-27 at Sycamore Shoals State Park. Another drama, "Then Conquer We Must," will be presented on the evenings of Sept. 26-28 and Oct. 3-7 at Kings Mountain National Military Park.

The City of Kings Mountain, in North Carolina just north of the battle site, has an almost non-stop series of activities scheduled from Oct. 3 through Oct. 7. Included among these is a possible address by President Carter at 2 p.m. Oct. 7.

Governors Jim Hunt of North Carolina and Richard Riley of South Carolina will meet at the boundary that separates their states near Kings Mountain National Military Park for a traditional hand-shaking ceremony.

Lt. Gov. Zell Miller will represent the State of Georgia during the final day's activities, and there is a possibility that Tennessee's Gov. Alexander will also be able to be on hand. Virginia will be represented by Lewis A. McMurrin Jr., chairman of the Virginia Independence Bicentennial Commission.

Secretary of the Interior Cecil D. Andrus will deliver the principal address at 3:45 on the afternoon of Oct. 7 when those reenacting the march of the Overmountain Men arrive at Kings Mountain National Military Park.

During those ceremonies, the colors of each of the five states that supplied men for the battle will be presented, and a representative of the United Kingdom will place a wreath on the grave of Major Ferguson.

Retired U.S. Army General William C. Westmoreland, former Army chief of staff, will serve as the honorary chairman of the 200th Anniversary Celebration and will be on hand for many of the events.

U.S. Rep. James T. Broyhill, who authored the legislation creating the Overmountain Victory National Historic Trail, will serve as the honorary chairman for North Carolina. P. Bradley Morrah, chairman of the South Carolina American Revolution Bicentennial Commission, will represent his state as honorary chairman.

Invitations have been issued to singer Dolly Parton of Tennessee, U.S. Senator John Warner of Virginia and Atlanta attorney Charles Kirbo to serve as honorary chairpersons for their states.

It is anticipated that the reenactment of the march of the Overmountain Men, the five days of activities in the City of Kings Mountain, and the program at Kings Mountain National Military Park will attract several thousand participants and-or visitors.

More than 1,000 persons have been involved in planning and preparations for the Celebration.
