Volleyball Is Beautiful

Boiling Springs. N.C.-If you've been thinking that volleyball is a net game reserved only for backyard picnics and beach parties, then you need to reconsider.

Dr. Dee Hunt, coordinator of women's athletics at Gardner-Webb College says volleyball is, "a beautiful sport." As women's volleyball coach at Gardner-Webb, Dr. Hunt sees it as the up and coming sport for women because they are able to excel in the skills volleyball requires -mainly jumping, agility and coordination.

With a 12-member team, volleyball is in its second consecutive year at Gardner-Webb. Each year, the players have split one volleyball scholarship between them and this season, the team will make its first overnight game trip.

Dr. Hunt considers these accomplishments major steps, not only for volleyball but for women's sports in general. "Concepts of women's sports have changed," Dr. Hunt said. "We are getting more enlightment of such a sports program for girls." But as for attendance at women's volleyball games, Dr. Hunt says that the public needs to be acclimated to the sport. "We are a sport in a basketball world," she said.

A graduate of Auburn University in Alabama with Middle Tennessee State University, Dr. Hunt has been at Gardner-Webb since 1978 as an associate professor in the Health and Physical Education Department. She likes the closeness and daily contact with the students that prevails at a small college campus. "I'm a teacher," Dr. Hunt said. "No, I'm not a sports fanatic. I am a fanatic about my kids."

Working in an area where football and basketball are dominating sports hasn't dampened her spirits. According to Dr. Hunt, there is an awakening occurring in women's athletics. Most colleges in the state have volleyball scholarships available to women and Shelby, East Rutherford and Kings Mountain High Schools have volleyball teams. For the first time, Gardner-Webb will have a women's tennis team this year with a limited fall season and a full spring season.

This year's volleyball team will have six returning players, who are seniors. As for predicting the season's success, Dr. Hunt said, "It looks difficult from the standpoint of the teams we're playing, promising from the progress we made during the past year."

The first game will be held on Sept. 23 when Gardner-Webb plays Lenoir Rhyne College and the University of North Carolina at Asheville at the Boiling Springs campus. Other teams in this year's schedule include Catawba College, UNC-Charlotte, University of South Carolina at Spartanburg, Western Carolina University, Furman and Mars Hill College.
