KM To Get An Award

Governor Jim Hunt will present the Governor's Community Excellence Award to Kings Mountain Wednesday during the second Governor's Economic Development Conference in Raleigh.

The award goes to those communities under 15,000 persons which meet requirements designed by the N.C. Department of Commerce to make them more competitive in recruiting industry.

"I want to commend the job done by the citizens of Kings Mountain. Their participation in this program is an example of the outstanding community spirit and desire for progress that we see throughout North Carolina," Governor Hunt said.

Each award winning community will receive highway signs designating it as a Community of Excellence. The North Carolina Department of Commerce will give special promotional attention to the award winning communities when working with industries looking for a plant site in North Carolina.

Among the standards a community must meet to win the award are:

1. An economic promotional organization must exist.
2. A development corporation to finance the construction of industrial building that can be leased or sold and that can option purchase and sell property must exist.
3. A certain number of industrial sites must be available.
4. A clean-up, fix-up campaign must be completed.

Ove 500 business and community leaders are expected for the Economic Development Conference at the McKimmon Center in Raleigh beginning at 1:30 p.m.

In addition to presenting the Community of Excellence Awards, Governor Hunt will also be the main speaker at the dinner.

The keynote speaker will be Edson D. deCastro, president of Data General Corporation of Westboro, Mass. Data General is one of the fastest growing electronics companies and has two facilities in North Carolina and a third under construction.

Other speakers will be professionals in industrial recruitment and economic development.
