(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1) merican communities, the major white decision makers in government, business and education, have relied too heavily on pseudo-black activists, self-appointed black civil rights leaders, and white appointed black spokesmen for informational input regarding the moods and attitudes of the black community. This practice has often turned out to be the 'Achilles heel' of many programs with great potentials, Jackson said.

Jackson concluded: "Many white decision makers in government, business, and education have instituted a practice of hand-picking and appointing a key black person to the position of 'in-house' authority on the problems of rendering services to the black community. In the field of education as well as in government, this black appointee is sometimes given the titles of 'Black Dean', 'Assistant to the President' or 'assistant to other high level white personnel. Most of these black appointees are fully aware of the source of their positions and power and they therefore display an unwavering fidelity to the white decision maker, even in defiance of the hopes and aspirations of the powerless black poor. To expose this problem to public view and to try and bring about meaningful change will be our quest. The Black community will never be able to implement programs to fulfill its manifest destiny as long as the decision making power in the black community rests in the hands of a black 'power elite' that tends to exemplify a sense of responsibility only to their white benefactors."

The special report is titled "Individualization in Schools: The Challenges and the Options." "Educators and philosophers have talked for many years about the unique nature of each human being and the need to attain the educational system to that uniqueness," the report states. "Yet, like Mark Twain's remark about the weather, nobody has moved to do anything about it until very recent times."

"Now individualization programs, both large and small, some costing millions of dollars and some costing almost nothing, have made their way into the nation's educational scene. The impact has been so great that education will never be the same again."

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1) apartment, "because we had an argument over his using my car." The woman said her husband was "under the influence and threatened to kill me for turning him in to the police the day before." Mrs. Thomas suffered a small cut across the center of her back.

An attempt to locate the two investigating officers, Charles G. Dierich and H. A. Walton, both white, and their commanding officer, Capt. Larry M. Smith, were in vain Tuesday night and early Wednesday.

According to Officer Walton's general offense, turned in at 6:52 p.m. Sunday, Thomas was "injured while assaulting police officers. Subject was carried to Wake Memorial Hospital to receive treatment. Warrants were served the subject at the magistrate's office prior to his being taken to the hospital."

Although the report listed Mr. Thomas as suffering from "swelling of the left side of the jaw," this newsman observed other bruises about his body and saw a truss (apparently for upper chest support), which he was wearing Monday.

His sister, Mrs. Mary Gillespie of E. Lane Street said, "They (the police) stomped him, I called the jail and the hospital and they told me that they didn't have my brother up there. Why did they take him to the magistrate's office first, when he was in need of immediate medical treatment?" Mrs. Gillespie also questioned the officer's right to enter the man's house without a proper warrant.

Thomas was taken back to Wake Memorial Hospital Monday afternoon, according to Mrs. Gillespie then carried to Duke Hospital in Durham, where it was reportedly decided to operate in the region of his left eye on Wednesday.

In the report filed by 34-year-old Officer Dierich, he stated: "James Preston Thomas was arrested for assault with a deadly weapon and public intoxication. After he was placed under arrest, he started resisting by kicking and striking me."

Dierich was treated and released at Wake Memorial Hospital for bruises of the right wrist, hand and mouth.

Mr. Thomas, who was charged with assault and battery, assault with a deadly weapon, public intoxication, resisting arrest, was strangely enough not charged with assault on a police officer "in the space at the bottom of the reports, reserved for placing specific charges. However, on warrant number 27748, he is specifically cited on that charge."

He is scheduled for trial on these charges on Monday, Oct. 4, at 9 a.m. in Wake County District Court.

More than 1,200 delegates from 17 congregations are expected. Members of the local congregations are making definite plans to attend. Interested persons wishing to share the spiritual benefits of this three day-day Seminar may contact, Samuel Brower, 604 Quarry Street, Raleigh, for final arrangements.

Brower announced the convention as a climax to the regular weekly service meeting at the Kingdom Hall.

The purpose of this Durham meeting Brower said: "is to give Jehovah's Witnesses and their friends three days of special ministerial training that we in turn may be of greater benefit to the people of our community in a spiritual way."

The convention is one the circuit level, and sponsored by the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York.

"All session will be open to the public," Brower said.

MASS MEET

The three other incidents under discussion will include: (1) The indictments, arrests, and jailing of all protestors including two of public school teachers, one who is the wife of Rev. John H. Taylor, III, assistant superintendent of Pitt County Schools and black city councilman of Greenville. Another is the sister-in-law of Rev. C. B. Greer, associate principal of Rose High School and black councilman in Greenville.

The arrest of two black businessmen, a funeral director and a restaurant owner; and the assault of the restaurant owner.

(3) The alleged legal lynchings by Highway Patrolman Billy Day and other law enforcement officers in Pitt County and across the state. Patrolman Day recently is alleged to have shot and killed a black man in Ayden, William Murphy, on August 6. A storm of protest has arisen in the Greenville and Ayden areas since this trooper's action.

Sponsors of the meeting include: The Black Pastors Conference of Pitt County; the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC); The Black Panther Party (BPP); the Committee for Racial Justice (CRJ); the NAACP; and the general black community.

The feature of the meeting will be conducted in the stadium at 2 p.m.

BUSING IS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1) The parking lots at Washington and Lucille Hunter Elementary once were small or even non-existent but such is no longer the case as construction crews hurriedly went about paving operations at both facilities last week preparing for the switch from "separate but equal" to integration.

There are things being done that had always been asked for before," the Washington Elementary janitor said, "but they're (the school board) just getting around to doing those things now."

He said there had also been some work done on landscaping an area at a creek on the school grounds.

The janitor at Hunter Elementary concurred with the Washington custodian by saying "you know they will get things straightened-up for their own kids," referring to the white parents who began touring the school days before school opened.

The one-time gym there was turned into a classroom complex during the period of "separate but equal" but is once again slated for recreational use.

One black man, standing outside a meeting held for parents at Lucille Hunter last week softly told a friend (noting the absence of a sizable number of black parents present) "I guess the black folks already know these schools ain't gonna be no worse than they have been and that they will probably be better, so what's the use of coming to 'check it out.'"

He said the latest indictment was "feeble" and said that Hanrahan should be charged with three counts of murder.

Hanrahan said after the course of the indictment that if he were guilty of the crimes so recklessly attributed to us, then why in heaven's name didn't the grand jury, which heard the evidence, indict us on those serious charges?

"I'm not afraid to have my conduct investigated," he continued, "In fact, I want that done to establish my complete innocence."

He said finally that the two grand jury investigations had found no evidence that Fred Hampton and Mark Clark were murdered, nor that the police search was illegal.

The jury did find, however, that out of the hundreds of shots fired in the incident, only one can be accounted for as coming from a Panther gun.

In announcing her participation in the Memorial Tribute, Leontyne Price, who was a very close friend of Mr. Young for many years, said:

"Whitney Young was a great lover of music and the theater and he spent many long hours in his all too short and busy career working toward their betterment. We hope, through this tribute to him, to show our gratitude for what he did and for what he tried to do."

SBA, VA To Assist Veterans

WASHINGTON, D. C. - An agreement to help veterans get the necessary training to qualify for SBA financial assistance to start their own businesses was announced Friday by Thomas S. Kleppe, Administrator of the Small Business Administration and Donald E. Johnson, Administrator of Veterans Affairs.

"I am asking all SBA personnel to take an active interest in counseling veterans as to the educational opportunities available to them which could lead to active participation in small businesses," Kleppe said. "Small business is the backbone of the American free enterprise system," he added, "and SBA is deeply involved in assisting Americans who wish to start or expand their own businesses."

"We owe it to the veterans who have a desire to own and operate their own businesses to provide them with sound management guidance and with financial help."

Under the plan, SBA's management assistance officers will counsel with veterans to determine what training, if any, they need to have a reasonable chance of succeeding in business, and will determine whether the veteran can qualify for an economic opportunity loan.

If SBA finds that the veteran needs additional training, SBA will certify this to the Veterans Administration, specifying what management training is necessary. The Veterans Administration will arrange for the training in an approved educational institution of the veteran's choice.

Rev. Neal Is Active in Crusade

NEW ORLEANS, LA.--Rev. W. J. Neal, pastor, Petty's Chapel A. M. E. Zion Church as secretary, City Minister Alliance, played a big role in the 1971 City-Wide Revival, which was held August 16-27.

It is reported that 31 pastors and their congregations took part in the crusade. The approach was unique, in that mobilization took place on many of the streets of the city. A small group would take a stand on a given corner and begin singing. It would not be long before a crowd would gather. A telephone call would dispatch a pastor, in a matter of minutes. He would deliver a short sermon and invite the assembled crowd to the daily meetings, held at 12 noon and 7:30 p. m., daily.

The first week, one of the participating pastors would deliver the sermons. The noon service was held at Calvary C.M.E. Church and the evening service at New Hope Baptist Church, the second week, guest ministers were featured. The Rev. Samuel Thornton, Long Island, N. Y. delivered the mid-day sermon and the Dr. F. M. Wright, Peoples Missionary Baptist Church, Dallas, Texas, was the evening speaker.

The music for each service was furnished from a city-wide choir that not only complimented the service, but motivated the worshippers to an ecstasy that enabled them to react to the powerful preaching of the minister. Crowds attended the services throughout the two weeks.

The remarkable feature of the entire program was the part the young people played. Many of them took part in the singing and a 7-year-old boy was one of the preaching sensations.

Mrs. Dunbar Given Final Rites Here

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR Mrs. Ellen Moorman Dunbar, 73, of 712 Manly Street, who died Saturday, August 21, were conducted last Wednesday at 4 p.m. at the First Baptist Church with the pastor, Rev. Dr. C. W. Ward, officiating. Burial followed at Mount Hope Cemetery.

Surviving are her husband, James E. Dunbar; two sons, Louis of Raleigh and Otis Dunbar of Greensboro; three daughters, Mrs. Thelma A. brute. He was depicted in roles lacking in depth. The social trends which fostered this image and created the need for the growth and development of the myths and rituals were the institution of slavery, and following reconstruction, the patterns of force which were used to keep the black man in a virtual economic, social, political and educational state of enslavement."

Miss Nash said that the change in the portrayal of the black was reflected in the changes in the social trends during and immediately prior to the sixties. "The dominant trends are those of a society more ready to face up to its responsibility toward the American black, and the black man becoming more aggressive on his own behalf, especially in the use of initiative and forcefulness."

In her study, Miss Nash examined some 100 plays prior to 1960, beginning with "The Padlock," a comic opera produced in 1769, which introduced the first comic servant, Mungo. For the sixties, Miss Nash selected eight plays which were seen on the stage in New York City during 1960-69: "A Raisin in the Sun," "Blast for Mister Charlie," "The Dutchman," "The Great White Hope," "Cereemonies in Dark Old Men," "No Place to Be Somewhere," "The Blacks," and "Slave Ship." All the plays were written by black writers except "The Great White Hope" and "The Blacks."

"In the theatre prior to the sixties," Miss Nash said, "the black man was characterized as something to be manipulated for the pleasure or service of the white man. He was stereotyped as the comic slave-servant, the contented, devoted slave-servant, the tragic mulatto, and the
