

Image/Reality

More than 100 drawings and paintings by doomed concentration camp inmates will convey the graphic message of Image and Reality: Jewish Life in Terezin, the exhibition which originally opened November 9, 1983 at the B'nai B'rith Klutznick Museum, will remain there until April 1, 1984.

Featured are 42 drawings all by children under 15. The works have never before been seen outside of Czechoslovakia. The dreams and terrors they depict document the tragic reality of life in Terezin (Theresienstadt) behind the false image of a "model Jewish village" with which the Nazi propaganda machine tried to deceive the world.

The children's drawings are part of an unprecedented Czechoslovak government loan of nearly 400 objects from the State Jewish Museum in Prague. All other loan items, on view in the United States for the first time, will be seen in the exhibition.

Augmenting the children's works in Image and Reality are some 60 drawings and paintings by adult inmates in Terezin, on loan from the Leo Baeck Institute in New York. These works were created in secret by professional and amateur Jewish artists while working in the camp under duress as draftsmen of military maps, charts and graphs. Included in the exhibition are works by Norbert Troller, Henry Behr, Fritz Fabian, Leo Haas, and Jo Spier, vividly recording the reality of starvation, disease and executions carried out against the backdrop of a deceptively pastoral setting.

Also included in the exhibition's documentation of real life in Terezin are dozens of photographs and such telling and poignant artifacts as medals from bogus sports events, confiscated jewelry, a cloth doll and a scroll of Esther used during Purim, the Jewish holiday celebrating a triumph over tyranny.

Alongside its propaganda function, Terezin served as a transit station for Jews from Bohemia, Moravia and other parts of Europe on their way to death camps farther east. In all, 140,000 Jews were sent to Terezin, including 15,000 children under 15. Thirty-three thousand were executed there and 88,000 sent to death in other camps. Only 100 of the children survived.

On April 15 the exhibit will be at The Jewish Museum in New York City where it will open jointly with The Precious Legacy and remain on view through August 26, 1984. The Precious Legacy will be on a national tour going to institutions in Miami Beach, New York, San Diego, New Orleans, Detroit and Hartford through July, 1985.

"DEPORTATION" by Joseph Richter

Drawn in pencil in 1943 in the extermination camp at SOBIBOR.

Joseph Richter made eighteen drawings of Sobibor, which were found after the war in the town of Chelm. Almost nothing is known of the artist - except that he is believed to have taken part in the revolt against the Nazis mounted by Sobibor prisoners, that he escaped and joined the partisans - and died during subsequent fighting.

himself, a honoree for the 1983 campaign. "We grew up together, part of a small Jewish community in the south. Together we have been able to learn and work and give of ourselves. To see my friends honored makes me feel honored all over again." The event was open to all contributors of $1200 or more to the 1984 Campaign.
