While gathering this information over the phone, their mother, Lois, detected the remains of my Chicago accent. After a few more minutes of conversation we discovered that we had gone to the same high school and had worked on the school's newspaper...in fact in our annual I am standing over Lois in the staff picture...she was sports editor at the time, and I was PR editor. I've been living in Charlotte 22 years and she's been here for 8...we never bumped into each other, but one of these days soon, I hope, we will get together and reminisce.

Social Services Hires New Director

Mrs. Adrienne J. Rosenberg of Atlanta, Georgia, has been hired as the new director of the Federation's Department of Social Services. She will begin her duties on August 15.

For the past two years, Mrs. Rosenberg has been Director of the Atlanta Jewish community Center's Adult Day Care Center. This service provides senior citizens, who live in the community but require supervised care during the day, with a full schedule of activities and meals.

Counseling with her clients and their families as well as establishing ties with other needed agencies and services has all been a part of Mrs. Rosenberg's job.

"Without continuing emphasis on meeting the needs of our own senior population, Mrs. Rosenberg's experience is of particular value to Charlotte," said Mrs. Bobbi Bernstein, Chair of the Social Services Department.

Before moving to Atlanta two years ago, Mrs. Rosenberg worked for nine years in Michigan as a counselor in a family service agency. In that capacity she worked with clients in the areas of individual problems, coordination with vocational and medical services, family and marital therapy, alcohol and drug rehabilitation. She also taught courses in sociology, modern social problems and social work at a local college.

Mrs. Rosenberg was born in Valdosta, Georgia and received her BA from Valdosta State College. She obtained her Masters in Social Work (MSW) from Virginia Commonwealth University in 1969. Her son, Brian, 8-years-old, and her daughter, Jennifer, 11 years-old, will be moving to Charlotte with Mrs. Rosenberg.

As director of Federation's Social Services Department she will be responsible for maintaining a program which has already served more than 400 members of the Jewish community and their families in its first four years. Established to provide services to geriatric clients and their families as well as to vocational clients, the department has grown professionals in the community.

"With the arrival of Mrs. Rosenberg," said Mrs. Bernstein, "We expect to enlarge the scope of geriatric services. We expect to concern ourselves with some of the most major problems facing older persons including transportation and homemaker services. Certainly Mrs. Rosenberg is qualified and capable of leading us in these directions."

The Social Services Department will be located at the Armstrong House on the project site as are the offices of the Federation and the Foundation. The phone number for all the offices there is 366-5007.
