own story when the hearings turned up a Nixon "enemies list" with Schorr's name on it. The hearings also disclosed evidence that the President had ordered Schorr investigated by the FBI.

Following the Watergate hearings, CBS assigned Schorr to cover investigations of CIA and FBI scandals. In 1976, the House of Representatives voted to suppress the final report of its investigating committee. Schorr arranged for the publication of an advance copy he had exclusively obtained, leading to his suspension by CBS and to an investigation by the House Ethics Committee. Although threatened with jail for contempt of Congress, Schorr refused to disclose his source.

Schorr subsequently wrote a book on his account of the Watergate experiences, Clearing the Air. He served as Regents Professor of Journalism at the University of California at Berkeley and for two years wrote a syndicated newspaper column. In 1979, Schorr was asked by Ted Turner to help create the Cable News Network, serving in Washington as its senior correspondent until 1985, when he left in a dispute over an effort to limit his editorial independence.

Having done occasional commentaries for NPR, Schorr was asked to expand his role there, participating in weekend programming as well as weekday commentaries and "live" events such as the Iran-Contra hearings. He now makes his headquarters at NPR.

World Beat

recently conducted a drag-net in six Israeli cities and towns to round up foreigners working in Israel illegally.

They hit restaurants, bars, hotels, factories and other places where aliens are likely to be employed illegally. At the end of the day, their "catch" numbered about 120.

Those rounded up so far come from the Philippines, Thailand, Portugal, Ghana and Britain. Many were employed as kitchen workers, housemaids or in factory jobs that Israeli workers prefer to avoid.

OTTAWA (JTA) — Six of the eight Jewish candidates in Canada's parliamentary elections won seats in the new House of Commons.

Most of them bucked the popular tide that returned the Progressive Conservative Party of incumbent Prime Minister Brian Mulroney to office with a comfortable majority of 170 seats in the 295-member house.

Soviet officials informed a large group of long-term refuseniks, many of them well known, that their purported knowledge of "state secrets" would no longer be used as grounds for barring their emigration. 2,334 Jews were permitted to emigrate in November, 179 of whom went to Israel.

Some 15,640 Jews have been allowed to emigrate so far this year, compared to 8,155 last year and a mere 914 the year before.

Rabbi Marc Wilson recently had two articles published in the Social Issues Resources Series, an anthology that is directed primarily to junior and senior high schools, colleges/universities and research libraries.

His article, "Blacks and Jews: Time to Reaffirm Common Ground" appears in the volume on Ethnic Groups; his article on Kristallnacht, "Shattered Innocence," appears in the Human Rights volume.

Renee Molko Gorelick will be exhibiting her paintings at a one-woman show in Miami Beach, Fla., at the Sheridan Center, until Jan. 10 (the show began on Dec. 1, 1988). The 8 works shown are from her SHAKTI SERIES. They are large-scale, vivid and abstract and exude a powerful and mysterious energy that forces viewers to respond to the drama of the colors and textures. Vibrant reds, yellows and oranges, fluorescent greens and blues detonate a primordial explosion onto the 6-by-8 foot canvases.

Gorelick

Renee has had one-woman shows in Charlotte and has participated in many group exhibits. She is an instructor of painting at the Jewish Community Center.
