

Israel to Give Palestinians Housing

The Israeli government has approved plans to relocate Palestinians from refugee camps into new buildings in the Gaza Strip. The plan calls for the construction of two new neighborhoods, housing approximately 80 families from the Jabalya camp and a similar number from the Shatti camp. The families will also receive a lump sum of a few thousand shekels from the government. The Civil Administration will prepare infrastructure for the new development.

Since 1971, Israeli attempts to move the refugees out of the camps have met with opposition from the Arab states. Each year, they have pushed the adoption of a UN resolution demanding that Israel desist from the removal of Palestinian refugees from camps in Gaza and the West Bank.

Efforts to increase employment opportunities and develop the economy also continue in the West Bank, where the head of the Civil Administration has granted 31 permits for the establishment of factories. These include plants for construction goods, raw materials, textiles and pharmaceuticals.
