

Sukkah-Hopping Surprise

Every fall our students look forward to Sukkah-hopping. This enlightening activity shows the students how various families in the community celebrate Sukkot. The Sukkah itself is a unifying structure where families and friends gather.

The big surprise this season was a miniature train that transported each class from the school to the first sukkah stop and played taped Hebrew music en route.

"You never know what's going to happen around here," exclaimed one student. "This school is so much fun."

Parents Learn About Safety at The Jewish Preschool on Sardis

Parents flocked to the morning program on "Keeping Your Child Safe in This Great Big World" at the Jewish Preschool on Sardis on October 8. Featured speakers were Daniel Starks and Dr. Donna Dillon-Stout. Daniel Starks, of NBC-6 "Don't Be A Victim" gave many sobering facts about crime in the 21st century and challenged parents to take specific steps to protect their children. Starks had genuine compassion for raising safe, aware children in a confusing new world that is markedly different from the one of a generation ago. He encouraged parents to be realistic about present dangers and to make a family plan for emergencies. His firm belief that parents are the best teachers of their children in security and trust. ☆

Donna Dillon-Stout, PhD., may be one of Charlotte's best-kept secrets. A practicing psychologist in the area, Dr. Dillon-Stout is an expert on working with children with anxiety. Her extensive experience at Harvard as a professional — as well as in her own home as a mother — was apparent as she shared practical tips for communicating with young children about big issues. Her calm demeanor and conservative advice to both sharing information with children and allowing them to venture out in the world was an outstanding model for parents. She encouraged parents to set limits, know the families of your children's friends, and do both in a loving way that envelops your children in security and trust. ☆
