Teachout to mean meeting their basic needs and maintaining their independence.

"I have problems using Ryan White money to support a healthy middle-class social worker while many of our patients don't know where lunch is coming from," Teachout explained at the time.

Based on these recurring problems and several new concerns, the board of directors voted to withdraw GROW's membership and participation in the Coastal Carolina HIV Care Consortium.

GROW has become a vital part of the gay and lesbian community in the Wilmington area, and they are making every effort to maintain each and every one of their current programs. If you can help them in any way (volunteer, financial, advice), contact them Ryan White money is earmarked for direct at 341-11 South College Road, Wilmington, ments from the counties served and donations must cover the costs of the program or it will be discontinued.

This is not the first time GROW has had problems with the Consortium. In July 1992, the Consortium omitted GROW, its lead organization, from a discussion concerning how the State of North Carolina was handling federal money from the Ryan White Fund. That led to the resignation of GROW's then executive director, Leo Teachout, who had been fronting expenses of about $20,000 per month out of his own pocket. Another frustration was the state's insistence that funds be used to hire a social worker when service to AIDS patients, interpreted by NC 28403; (910) 675-9222.
