Conservative Christian group plans to secede in South Carolina

COLUMBIA — A Texas group wants conservative Christians to move to South Carolina — 12,000 at a time — to form a biblically inspired government in order to then secede from the United States.

Decrying a national tolerance of abortion and gay marriage, and the teaching of evolution, ChristianExodus.org hopes to achieve a majority of like-minded Christians in the state by 2016, the planned year of secession.

ChristianExodus.org's leader is Cory Burnell, 28, who lives in Tyler, Tex., where he teaches at a local Christian school and runs a coffee shop and mobile phone store.

The group is basically unknown to South Carolina's government and religious leaders. And it is not being officially tracked by such watchdog groups as the Alabama-based Southern Poverty Law Center, which monitors extremist activity in the country. Burnell said the first 12,000-strong migration is scheduled for 2006 — which is when he will move to South Carolina with his wife and son. The migrations will target specific conservative political districts, he said.

Palmetto UMOJA holds inaugural meeting

COLUMBIA — On June 19 a group of African-American gays and lesbians from South Carolina met to form Palmetto Umoja. The organization hopes to create a dialogue in the state on issues concerning gays and lesbians of color, as well as foster a sense of visibility for that community. Alvin McEwen of Columbia, a member of the interim executive board, said the organization was initially formed because he noticed how African-American ministers around the country were teaming up with the religious right to speak out against gay marriages. He said he was bothered by the possibility of it happening in South Carolina.

"As time went on and I talked to more gays and lesbians of color," McEwen said, "I began to see that gay marriage is just the tip of the iceberg. Gays and lesbians of color face invisibility in both the gay and the African-American communities."

Palmetto Umoja is the first organization of its kind in the state of South Carolina, an organization of gays and lesbians of color who will be a vocal and active part of both the African-American and gay communities. Kenneth J. Hubbard of Charleston, another board member, said he feels very optimistic about Palmetto Umoja and will do all he can to ensure its success.

"If I don't stand up and fight for the rights for all of God's people then everything we do is in vain," said Hubbard. "All the people who marched and died for our rights were marching for the rights for me to be free. What that means is that I now must take up the torch and carry that flame on for all the GLBT brothers and sister of color."

Members plan to establish by-laws, a mission statement and goals for the coming year at the next meeting.

Anyone interested in becoming a member of Palmetto Umoja should contact CharleKenghis@aol.com for more details.
