(Written for the Salisbury Banner.) A WINTER HYMN.

White morns, gray noons and gusty eves! Nights, when, by firelight, fancy weaves Sweet dreams of melancholy ! Bleak, spectral rays, from sickly sun! Stark shadows, in the forest dun!

And thou, dead past, so holy, Whom amber leaf and pure snow-cloud, Twin mourners, ever gently shroud For graves, where erring man is bowed, In wild, regretful raving!

Frost-workers, guised in di'mond pall Ice kings, whose pearly sceptres fall ! Rich holly, by the ruined wall! Blest pine, in triumph waving ! Magicians, from the pole's weird realm,

Chant, silent chant your mystic hymn, Like echo of the olden time, Sung low by spirits grieving !-Heard only in the soul's deep ear; Heard there-yet never written here ! But hark ! thro' twilight's wood-haunts dim,

Rolls now the grand funereal hymn Of space's vast cathedral! For Nature's King-Musician, Air, Great Winter's death-harp trilleth there, 'Nexth star-lamps cold and lustral !

Skilled hands, from out the boundless sky-Their key-note endless Deity-Sweep o'er the universe of trees, And with a bass of mighty seas-On world-encircling shores that wail-Mingle the wood's orchestral peal! Such time did Ossian's harp of old, From icy crags-snow mountains bold, Join with the wind's congenial strains, Whose burden in my heart remains. November's gloomy bard ! to me, In seasons of blind revelry, In selfish hours of hideous bate-Ambition's lust-pride's dangerous state-Come, with thy solemn warning tone, And call me from the giddy throne

And then, as now, I'll list the chime Of Virtue's wholesome sadness-The death-hymn of the year sublime-The sweet lone knell of 'parting time !' O phantom voice ! sing from thy tomb, And on the winds forever roam!"
