

Carolina Seeks Return To Winning Ways

By WESTY FENHAGEN
DTH Sports Editor

North Carolina's Tar Heels attempt to hit the comeback trail today when they battle Davidson's scrappy Wildcats in Memorial stadium, Charlotte, N. C. Kickoff is slated for 1430.

Although pointing for the major engagement with Duke next week in Chapel Hill before the Pre-Flight cadets, the Tar Heels are not taking the Wildcats lightly. After losing their first five games of the season, the Wildcats came back last week to trounce the strong VMI cadets, 24-6, in one of the upsets of the week. Davidson has at last hit its stride and holds high hopes of giving the Tar Heels a whale of a battle today.

Carolina, beaten in two consecutive weeks by Tulane and N. C. State, is anxious for revenge and a capacity crowd of 10,000 today will witness a keen duel between the old rivals.

An aerial battle is in prospect for the customers with both clubs boasting strong passing attacks. Davidson scored three of its touchdowns against VMI via the air lanes and the Tar Heels made all of its points against State via the same medium. Shot Cox, Billy Myers, and Walt Pupa are all ready to fill the air with passes for Carolina while Johnny Frederick will carry most of the burden for the Wildcats.

The Tar Heels will start much the same lineup that started against State last week except in the backfield where Co-captain Joe Austin who still has not fully recovered from injuries sustained in the Tulane game may see limited service.

All past records will be forgotten next Saturday when the Tar Heels renew their bitter rivalry with the Duke Blue Devils before an expected 40,000 in Kenan stadium. Cadets will occupy two end sections next to the student head of the Haitian Republic. He spent 13½ years in this position, being the head of police, trainer of troops, and a general handy man. The Haitian powers then decided to send the Sarg to the island of La-Gonave, and there he went, to be the only white man on the island for 4½ years, with over 12,000 natives, all negroes. Sarg learned the native tongue with ease, and the natives thought so much of him they made him their King. They also had a Queen, and several lesser Queens, but none of them were his, Wirkus explains. No vehicle was able to run on the isle, and travel via horseback was imperative. The Sarg made around 500 miles a month, in his capacity as collector of revenue, high judge, receiver, chief of police, practically being a monarch. While on the isle, "King" swam, fished, hunted, and collected items, many of the latter now being in museums, some of the choice pieces resting in the Smithsonian Institute in Washington.

During his travels, Wirkus has visited every Central American country, toured large parts of South America, been on the Virgin Islands, and covered the West Indies. He made valuable motion pictures on his tours, and has sold them to March of Time, and until war started received regular royalties from the French operators for the privilege of showing them.

During his years in the Reserve, Sarg Wirkus lectured all over America, and is a member of the New York Explorers Club. He took a rifle team directly out of the Haitian bush in 1924 to the Olympics, and came out second, and was in the Haitian uprissections but will be charged the regular service men's charge of 50c for admittance.

ings of 1915 and 1919. Facts and figures about Sarg Wirkus could go on and on, but space is limited here, so we'll recommend a mighty fine book now in the U. N. C. library, "The White King of La-Gonave." It tells a great deal about our gunnery sergeant and was written by one who knows, yes, Faustin E. Wirkus.

PLATOON SERGEANT WALTER L. "ANDY" DEVINE is another of the local wearers of the rainbow colored uniform, and a handy man to have around in a battle. He has spent 7 years in the Corps, and is a native North Carolinian. He has been a participant in the National Rifle Matches at Camp Perry many times and is the holder of many medals for both rifle and pistol marksmanship.

PLATOON SERGEANT PHILIP M. BOND has 5 years service in the Marines. After doing one hitch he returned to civil life as a bank guard, but came back when danger threatened. A "Sooner" from Oklahoma, Boyd has done a little bit of everything, and is the only "Leatherneck" here that was trained on the West Coast. As a raw recruit he made a cruise to Pearl Harbor, and his ability to shoot straight earned him the chance to get east to the Marine and National Rifle Matches. Easy going, mild mannered, he doesn't look like a killer, but as a Marine, can be tough as the occasion demands.

SERGEANT GEORGE S. WANAMAKER, recently married to a Chapel Hillian, is a native of Florida, and entered the Marine Corps, as soon as he was graduated from high school. He received his boot training at Parris Island, S. C., and has seen duty on the USS Arkansas, USS Barnette, in Cuba, Porto Rico, Haiti, the Virgin Isles, and all up and down the east coast of the states. His ambition, is first to get this war over with, and then become a rancher.

SERGEANT J. R. CRUZ, Michigan born, was at one time an accountant, having attended Temple University in Philadelphia. He is an accomplished speaker of Spanish. He has attended two schools in the Marines, both of them teaching about infantry weapons. Cruz was one of the head instructors of the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th classes of Marine officers at Quantico, Va., and in the class of the 5th, the highest score ever made on a rifle range was compiled.

SERGEANT BOTH, the man with the cookie duster on his upper lip, entered the Corps in 1940, coming from a job with a construction company. He has been with Sergeant Cruz all the way, and says that his life in the service has been dull thus far.

There you have the Marine Aviation

Detachment at this Pre-Flight School.

A favorite story going the rounds might well conclude this tribute to the Leathernecks. It seems that a Marine corporal had been imbibing a few alcoholics, and had been refused another drink at the bar; so shining like a Xmas tree he started home. While waiting on a corner for the traffic light to change, he encountered an Army captain, and a Navy lieutenant commander. He immediately launched into a confab on the greatness of the U. S. Marines, and as you may be sure, it was really a one-sided story. Finally the captain became fed up, and said, "We'll admit the Marines are great fighters, but you must remember, when a Marine goes into battle, there are 10 soldiers on one side of him, and 10 sailors on the other." The corporal drew himself up to his height of 6 feet, 2 inches, and standing at attention, said, "Sir, that is the right proportion." Happy birthday, Marines!

the dance and they're engulfed by civilian boys anyway.

By now you are about the only cadet who hasn't given up what appears to be a hopeless cause. The girl running the affair does her best for you, however. "There are two possibilities," she says, and disappears to look them up.

You are now left alone with most of the boys and girls sitting around casting glances in your direction. You ignore them, however, by picking up a magazine in a nonchalant manner and settling yourself in a chair where you read something about something in whatever magazine it is till the girl comes back. Her news is bad, of course—one girl is at the sorority party and the second isn't going out. No, she can't think of anyone else.

So you go to the dance stag, as usual, and it's probably just as well. After all, now you can take your pick of girls instead of accepting one by chance.

Of course, "Kitty" is a nice name.

Gehrig Favored, But Hitler Gets Vote

For Influence on Sports

While Hitler is not entirely neglected, the majority of Pre-Flight cadets now at this station are of the opinion that Lou Gehrig and Joe Louis have "contributed the most to sports in the past decade."

In studying the response of the members of the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th Battalions to such a query in a Public Relations Office questionnaire, it is found that 55% give the nod to the former Yankee first sacker, 29% nominate the Brown Bomber, while the remaining 16% select a variety of lesser sports figures.

In casting a vote for Hitler, Cadet Robert R. Lane (7th Battalion), of Princeton, N. J., laconically suggests: "Take a look at us."
