Stronger sounds the roll of drums, faster the cadence, longer the hours, more intense the strain, more determined the striving toward the goal. The world is turned upside down and inside out. Society is dislocated and maladjusted. But—it is the world in which we live. These are the days of our years. No peace and no contentment—except for those who know where to find it.

Without retreating a step; without turning from our job before it is finished; without failing to perform the task our day and age has laid upon us, we can—and we must—find a place of peace and contentment. We must make for ourselves a secret place where the battle noises cannot be heard and where a disjointed society cannot press in upon us.

That place is like a world-within-a-world. There we can withdraw momentarily from the maddening world about us, be refreshed, and go forth again to answer the call of the hour. There we can secure for the night and awaken strengthened to meet the battle of the day. It is the citadel of our soul—the place of communion with God. Precious is that place and precious the moments we spend there.

On the Lighter Side . . .

It Can't Happen Here

The platoon officer dozed in his bunk. A very pleasant smile flickered across his relaxed face and he seemed to be drifting into dreamland with nothing but best wishes for the entire world. Suddenly there was a transformation. His face grew stern and he belatedly: "Damn you, sheep! Why can't you keep in step?"

* * * * *

Marine Sentry to Wave: "Pardon me, but it's against rules to swim here."

Wave: "Well, for heaven's sake! Why didn't you say so before I undressed?"

Marine: "It ain't against regulations to undress."
