

Suggestions On Travel Enjoyment, Safety

Taking off on a weekend trip or that third week of your vacation this year? Vacation and recreation-bound travelers can profit from the following suggestions, aimed at increased travel enjoyment and driving safety.

First—Get your car in top running order. Getting repairs on the road may cost more than at home, to say nothing of time lost and tempers heated.

Second—Instead of setting forth simply to be on the go, think through your trip, planning the route and destination. Figure out your mileage in advance.

Third—Traveling light makes it easier. Try to stow everything in the car trunk, but if you must put things in the car, let that be the suitcase that will be needed for overnight stops. Keep luggage out of sight, for a locked car is no discouragement to a determined thief. For clothing, wise travelers make much use of the new fabrics that need no ironing.

Fourth—Travel with a good map, one that is not out-of-date. It will help you chart your course and perchance save you from getting lost.

Fifth—Get an early start. You'll make better time if you do most of your driving before the other motorists take to the road. Likewise, try to get back early and avoid getting trapped in the late Sunday rush.

Sixth—Cultivate good driving habits. Never exceed the posted speed limit; allow plenty of following distance from the car ahead. Don't pass on hills and curves, and never drive when you're drowsy or tired.

Seventh—Stop frequently. The better the road and driving conditions, the more reason to stop for rests. Don't try to go too far in any one day. A person's age, his health, his reactions all enter into this.

If an emergency situation or personal problems arise while on your trip, the National Travelers Aid Association stands ready to help. There are Travelers Aid stations in 109 cities in the United States. Travelers Aid personnel are experienced in helping people in difficulty. If you run into trouble, ask a policeman, state trooper or AAA service station where the nearest Travelers Aid station is located.

Accident Prevention Is Not Black Magic

"One accident is one too many," is a stock slogan for safety work. "He was known as a safe worker—good accident record," is often said about the guy who meets up with one. "His number was up—that's all," some people will say when they learn the sad details. We wonder if this is all there is to it.

Accidents seldom happen without warning. Maybe it is just a series of small warnings which should ring a bell. Several close calls, such as accidents when equipment is damaged but with no injury to employees, are red lights we shouldn't ignore.

After an accident, we often hear people say, "Well, we will have three of them; accidents always occur in 'threes'." Accidents and injuries result from mistakes of omission or commission—because someone, maybe ourselves, has failed to do what he was supposed to do. Every accident is caused and if we remove the cause, we won't have the accident. Let's leave magic in its rightful place.
