A Step Toward Success . . .

Someone has wisely said: God grant me the serenity to accept things I cannot change, the courage to change things I can, and the wisdom to know the difference.

Human beings are by nature disposed to worry about many things about which they can do nothing. Ever stop to think of the wasted time that could be spent in concentrating on things that ought to be done effectively—one at a time?

Are you able to do one thing at a time with dispatch—while keeping your mind free from concern over other duties? If so, your job is well in control and you are on the road to success.

The greatest of men can do but one thing at a time—but they can do it well. Let past experiences help you to more effective work today. But do not let the past befuddle your mind. Begin today to concentrate on just one thing at a time. Do your best to do it quickly, effectively. Be master of your time, your job, yourself.

Fallacies And Facts Of Economic Principles

The economic facts of life are often presented in textbooks or other publications in a confusing, hard-to-read manner. This is one situation that helps account for many misguided and incorrect beliefs on the subject of economics in American life. The American Economic Foundation has listed some of these basic principles in an easy-to-understand plan.

Fallacies . . .

1. That Government has something to give the people which it does not first have to take away from the people.
2. That any benefits or aid whatsoever, foreign or domestic, can come from anywhere except out of the production of the people.
3. That job security can be guaranteed by industry's management.

GEORGE HIGH of the Rayon Twisting Department knows that his job and all other jobs are made possible by the consumer. He understands that in our modern exchange economy, all employment and all payroll come from customers—that the only real job security is customer security. With no customers, there are no jobs and no payroll.

Make Humus For Good Soil Dressing

Dirt dobers may profit from a compost "factory" in an inconspicuous corner of the garden.

You can build the compost pile—layer on layer—with a bottom of rich topsoil, a six-inch layer of non-woody material such as grass or leaves, a thin layer of stable waste, if available, and fertilizer or composting chemical. If you have no fertilizer or composting chemical, a sprinkling of lime between layers of material will be effective.

Allow the pile to remain bowl-shaped in the center so it can catch the rain. If made within a period of little rainfall, water the pile with hose or bucket. When the material has been decomposing for six weeks or longer, turn it over. You will have a rich humus mixture for dressing the top of the soil, or for digging into garden beds.

George Washington Carver, whose birth anniversary is April 5, performed virtual miracles with the common peanut. The famous Negro scientist said that he once asked God to tell him the mystery of the Universe.

"But God replied," said Carver, "that the knowledge of the Universe is reserved to Him alone."

"Then I asked Him, 'Lord, tell me the mystery of the peanut.' And God said, 'Now George, that is nearly your size. I will reveal it to you.' And so God did."

THINK OF SAFETY EVERY DAY

Get the habit, take the short time needed to carefully read posted notices. Safety rules, messages and posters are for you to read, think about, act upon and remember. Ask yourself honestly if you are following the safety idea that's currently featured. By constantly learning how to work safely, you are helping yourself to stay safe.
